(i) the capital cost to the taxpayer of the property shall be deemed to be the amount that was the capital cost of the property to the trust, and

Technical Notes: Subsection 107.4(3) of the Act applies where there has been a "qualifying disposition" of property. As set out in subsection 107.4(1), a qualifying disposition of property is a disposition that does not result in any change in the beneficial ownership of the property and that otherwise meets the conditions set out in that subsection. Subsection 107.4(3) generally provides for the rollover of property on the disposition.

To put new section 107.4 in context, the commentary below summarizes the tax consequences of transfers to bare trusts, protective trusts and revocable living trusts under the existing law before describing new section 107.4. Reference should also be made to the commentary on amended section 73 and subsection 104(1).

Bare Trusts

The stated interpretation of the existing law by the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency (CCRA) is that, where property is held by a bare trust, the trust is ignored for income tax purposes and the transferor/settlor is considered to be the owner of property held by the trustee in the trustee's capacity as an agent. [See Income Tax Technical News No. 7, Interpretation Bulletin IT-216 and GST Technical Information Bulletin B-068; see also Notes to 104(1) — ed.] Paragraph (e) of the definition "disposition" in section 54 is the current authority for the position that there is no "disposition" of property on its transfer to a "bare trust".

The CCRA has stated that it generally views a trust to be a bare trust when:

- the trustee has no significant powers or responsibilities, and can take no action without instructions from the settlor;
- the trustee's only function is to hold legal title to the property; and
- the settlor is the sole beneficiary and can cause the property to revert to him or her at any time.

The CCRA's position that transfers to bare trusts do not constitute "dispositions" has generally been reinforced because, under amended subsection 104(1), "bare trusts" are not treated as trusts. For this reason, the amended definition of "disposition" in subsection 248(1) will not apply because of the transfer by a settlor of a "bare trust" for the benefit of the settlor. In addition, it should be noted that it is possible that a settlor may establish a "bare trust" for another person. Where this is the case, the transfer of property to the "bare trust" by a settlor would be considered to be a disposition of property by the settlor to the person for whom the "bare trust" has been established.

Revocable living trusts

The CCRA has expressed the view [Income Tax Technical News No. 7 — ed.] that a "revocable living trust" should be fully recognized as a trust for income tax purposes. It is of the view that the transfer of property to such a trust involves a change in beneficial ownership of the property and is at the full fair market value of the property. A "revocable living trust" is an estate planning tool used, instead of a will, by individuals. The settlor of the trust is the trustee and, during his or her lifetime, is the sole income and capital beneficiary and retains the right to revoke, alter or amend the trust at any time. However, there is a change of beneficial ownership involved in a transfer to a "revocable living trust" because other beneficiaries under the trust have rights under the trust in the event that the settlor does not revoke the trust before his or her death.

The draft amendments to section 107.4 are generally consistent with the CCRA's present views in this regard. New subsection 107.4(3) is not intended to apply to transfers to revocable living trusts, on the basis that there is no qualifying disposition of property involved. However, for trusts created after 1999, it is generally possible for individuals who are at least 65 years of age to transfer capital property to a revocable living trust on a rollover basis pursuant to amended subsection 73(1).

Protective trusts

The CCRA considers the attributes of a "protective trust" to be as follows:

- The settlor is the sole beneficiary under the trust.
- The settlor is entitled to as much of the annual income and realized capital gains of the trust as he or she requests.
- The property of the trust will revert to the settlor if the trust is terminated prior to the settlor's death.
- The trust will terminate upon the death of the settlor unless it is terminated at an earlier date. (When the settlor dies, any property held by the trust will devolve in accordance with the terms of the settlor's will or, if the settlor dies intestate, the property of the trust will devolve in accordance with the laws of intestacy that are relevant to the estate.)

The CCRA considers that, under the existing law, a protective trust is fully recognized as a trust for income tax purposes and that there is no "disposition" of property where a settlor transfers it to a protective trust. Trust income and gains are attributed to the settlor in accordance with subsection 75(2).

New subsection 107.4(3) will apply to transfers to protective trusts, assuming that the requirements for a qualifying disposition are met. However, transfers of capital property to protective trusts created after 1999 will generally be covered by amended subsection 73(1).

The rules in subsection 107.4(3) (and subsection 73(1), where it is applicable) also bridge a gap in the existing law in the context of protective trusts by making it clear at what cost a transferee is considered to acquire property where there has been a transfer of property without any change in its beneficial ownership and the bare trust regime does not apply.

107.4 (1) Qualifying disposition — For the purpose of this section, a "qualifying disposition" of a property means a disposition of the property by a person or partnership (in this subsection referred to as the "contributor") as a result of a transfer of the property to a particular trust where

(a) the disposition does not result in a change in the beneficial ownership of the property;

(b) the proceeds of disposition would, if this Act were read without reference to this section and sections 69 and 73, not be determined under any provision of this Act;

(c) if the particular trust is non-resident, the disposition is not

(i) by a person resident in Canada or by a partnership (other than a partnership each member of which is non-resident), or

(ii) a transfer of taxable Canadian property from a non-resident person who was resident in Canada in any of the ten calendar years preceding the transfer;

(d) the contributor is not a partnership, if the disposition is part of a series of transactions or events that begin after December 17, 1999 that includes the cessation of the partnership's existence and a subsequent distribution from a personal trust to a former member of the partnership in circumstances to which subsection 107(2) applies;

(e) unless the contributor is a trust, there is immediately after the disposition no absolute or contingent right of a person or partnership (other than the contributor or, where the property was co-owned, each of the joint contributors) as a beneficiary (determined with reference to subsection 104(1.1)) under the particular trust;

(f) the contributor is not an individual (other than a trust described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1)), if the particular trust is described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1);

(g) the disposition is not part of a series of transactions or events

(i) that begins after December 17, 1999 and that includes the subsequent acquisition, for consideration given to a personal trust, of a capital interest or an income interest in the trust,

(ii) that begins after December 17, 1999 and that includes the disposition of all or part of a capital interest or an income interest in a personal trust, other than a disposition solely as a consequence of a distribution from a trust to a person or partnership in satisfaction of all or part of that interest, or

(iii) that begins after June 5, 2000 and that includes the transfer to the particular trust of particular property as consideration for the acquisition of a capital interest in the particular trust, if the particular property can reasonably be considered to have been received by the particular trust in order to fund a distribution (other than a distribution that is proceeds of disposition of a capital interest in the particular trust);

(h) the disposition is not, and is not part of, a transaction

(i) that occurs after December 17, 1999, and

(ii) that includes the giving to the contributor, for the disposition, of any consideration (other than consideration that is an interest of the contributor as a beneficiary under the particular trust or that is the assumption by the particular trust of debt for which the property can, at the time of the disposition, reasonably be considered to be security);

(i) subsection 73(1) does not apply to the disposition and would not apply to the disposition if

(i) no election had been made under that subsection, and

(ii) section 73 were read without reference to subsection 73(1.02); and

(j) if the contributor is an amateur athlete trust, a cemetery care trust, an employee trust, an inter vivos trust deemed by subsection 143(1) to exist in respect of a congregation that is a constituent part of a religious organization, a related segregated fund trust (as defined by section 138.1), a trust described in paragraph 149(1)(o.4) or a trust governed by an eligible funeral arrangement, an employees profit sharing plan, a registered education savings plan or a registered supplementary unemployment benefit plan, the particular trust is the same type of trust.

Technical Notes: As discussed above, subsection 107.4(3) generally provides a rollover whenever there is a qualifying disposition of property to a trust. Under new subsection 107.4(1), a "qualifying disposition" of property is a "disposition" (as defined in subsection 248(1)) of the property as a result of a transfer to a particular trust where

- because of the disposition, there is no change in the beneficial ownership of the property,
- the proceeds would not, disregarding sections 69 and 73, be determined under any other provision of the Act (e.g., transfers from a trust to a beneficiary under the trust where the proceeds are determined under subsection 107(2)),
- the disposition is neither by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident trust nor a transfer of taxable Canadian property from a non-resident person who was resident in Canada in any of the ten calendar years preceding the transfer to a non-resident trust,
- the disposition is not by a partnership (other than a partnership each member of which is non-resident) to a non-resident trust,
- the disposition is not by a partnership, if the disposition is part of a series of transactions or events beginning after December 17, 1999 that includes the cessation of the partnership's existence and a subsequent distribution from a personal trust to a former member of the partnership in circumstances to which subsection 107(2) applies,
- immediately after the disposition, unless the contributor is a trust, there is no absolute or contingent right as a beneficiary under the particular trust for any beneficiary other than the contributor or joint contributors, as the case may be. (For this purpose, there is a restricted meaning under new subsection 104(1.1) associated with the expression "beneficiary".),
- the disposition does not occur after December 17, 1999 if the disposition is, or is part of, a transaction where the contributor receives for the disposition any consideration (other than consideration that is an interest of the contributor as a beneficiary under the particular trust or the assumption by the particular trust of debt for which the property may at the time of the disposition reasonably be considered to be security),

- the disposition is not to a trust described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1) (generally trusts relating to employee compensation and retirement savings and trusts deemed to exist for income tax purposes), except if it is a disposition by a trust so described,
- the disposition is not part of a series of transactions or events
  - — that begins after December 17, 1999 and that includes the disposition of any interest in a personal trust (other than a disposition solely as a consequence of a distribution from the trust),
  - — that begins after December 17, 1999 and that includes the subsequent acquisition, for consideration given to a personal trust, of any interest in the trust, or
  - — that begins after June 5, 2000 and that includes the transfer to the particular trust of particular property as consideration for the acquisition of a capital interest in the particular trust, if the particular property can reasonably be considered to have been received in order to fund a distribution from the other trust (other than a distribution that is proceeds of disposition of a capital interest in the particular trust),
- subsection 73(1) would not apply to the disposition if no election were made under that subsection and there were no restrictions in subsection 73(1.02) as to the circumstances in which subsection 73(1) applies, and
- where the contributor is an amateur athlete trust, a cemetery care trust, an employee trust, an inter vivos trust deemed by subsection 143(1) to exist in respect of a congregation that is a constituent part of a religious organization, a related segregated fund trust (as defined in section 138.1), a trust described in paragraph 149(1)(o.4) or a trust governed by an eligible funeral arrangement, an employees profit sharing plan, a registered education savings plan or a registered supplementary unemployment benefit plan, the particular trust is the same type of trust. For example, if the contributor is a related segregated fund trust, the particular trust must also be a related segregated fund trust.

Related Provisions: 75(2) — Revocable or reversionary trust; 104(1.1) — Restricted meaning of "beneficiary"; 107.4(2) — Application of para. (1)(a); 107.4(3) — Tax consequences of qualifying dispositions; 248(1)"disposition" — Whether transfer to a trust is a disposition.

(2) Application of paragraph (1)(a) — For the purpose of paragraph (1)(a),

(a) where a trust (in this paragraph referred to as the "transferor trust"), in a period that does not exceed one day, disposes of one or more properties in the period to one or more other trusts, there is deemed to be no resulting change in the beneficial ownership of those properties if

(i) the transferor trust receives no consideration for the disposition, and

(ii) as a consequence of the disposition, the beneficial ownership at the beginning of the period of each beneficiary under the transferor trust in each particular property of the transferor trust is the same as the beneficiary's beneficial ownership at the end of the period in the particular property that relates to the beneficiary's combined interest in the transferor trust and in the other trust or trusts; and

(b) where a trust (in this paragraph referred to as the "transferor") governed by a registered retirement savings plan or by a registered retirement income fund transfers a property to a trust (in this paragraph referred to as the "transferee") governed by a registered retirement savings plan or by a registered retirement income fund, the transfer is deemed to not result in a change in the beneficial ownership of the property if the annuitant of the plan or fund that governs the transferor is also the annuitant of the plan or fund that governs the transferee.

Technical Notes: Subsection 107.4(2) provides a supplementary rule that applies for the purpose of paragraph 107.4(1)(a). Paragraph 107.4(2)(a) is designed to allow for the division of properties among trusts in certain cases. Consider, for example, the situation where 1,000 shares of ABC Corp. are held in trust A for beneficiaries X and Y. Assume that X has a 30 per cent interest in the trust and Y has the remaining 70 per cent interest. If 300 shares are transferred to trust B for X and the remaining 700 shares are transferred on the same day to trust C for Y, there has been no change in the economic interests of X and Y. Paragraph 107.4(2)(a) provides that, in these circumstances, the requirement in paragraph 107.4(1)(a) that there be no change in beneficial ownership is satisfied in the event that trust A receives no consideration. Consequently, assuming the other conditions under subsection 107.4(1) are satisfied, there would be a qualifying disposition of the 300 shares to trust B and another qualifying disposition of the 700 shares to trust C.

Paragraph 107.4(2)(b) deems there to be no change in beneficial ownership of a property where the property is transferred from a trust governed by an RRSP or RRIF to another trust governed by an RRSP or RRIF, provided that the annuitant of the transferor is the same as that of the transferee. The application of paragraph 107.4(2)(b) is illustrated in the following example.

EXAMPLE

Tom is the annuitant of an RRSP under which Laura is named as the beneficiary. The property is transferred from that RRSP trust to another trust governed by an RRSP under which Tom is the annuitant and under which Michelle is named as beneficiary. Assume that, because of an election or otherwise, neither paragraph (f) nor (g) of the definition "disposition" in subsection 248(1) of the Act applies.

Results:

1. In these circumstances, paragraph 107.4(2)(b) deems, for the purpose of paragraph 107.4(1)(a), there to be no change in beneficial ownership.

2. Consequently, there should be a qualifying disposition of the property.

Paragraph 107.4(2)(b) is part of a set of amendments intended to clarify the tax treatment of transfers of property involving RRSPs and RRIFs. For further detail, see the commentary on paragraphs 107.4(3)(c) and (f) and (g) of the new definition "disposition" (in subsection 248(1)) and subsections 206(4) and 248(25.1).

(3) Tax consequences of qualifying dispositions — Where at a particular time there is a qualifying disposition of a property by a person or partnership (in this subsection referred to as the "transferor") to a trust (in this subsection referred to as the "transferee trust"),

(a) the transferor's proceeds of disposition of the property are deemed to be

(i) where the transferor so elects in writing and files the election with the Minister on or before the transferor's filing-due date for its taxation year that includes the particular time, or at any later time that is acceptable to the Minister, the amount specified in the election that is not less than the cost amount to the transferor of the property immediately before the particular time and not more than the fair market value of the property at the particular time, and

(ii) in any other case, the cost amount to the transferor of the property immediately before the particular time;

(b) except as otherwise provided under paragraph (c), the transferee trust's cost of the property is deemed to be the amount, if any, by which

(i) the proceeds determined under paragraph (a) in respect of the qualifying disposition exceed

(ii) the amount by which the transferor's loss otherwise determined from the qualifying disposition would be reduced because of subsection 100(4), paragraph 107(1)(c) or (d) or any of subsections 112(3) to (4.2), if the proceeds determined under paragraph (a) were equal to the fair market value of the property at the particular time;

(c) notwithstanding subsection 206(4), for the purposes of Part XI and regulations made for the purposes of that Part, the transferee trust's cost of the property is deemed to be

(i) the cost amount to the transferor immediately before the particular time where

(A) the particular time is before 2000,

(B) the transferor is a trust governed by a registered retirement savings plan or a registered retirement income fund,

(C) the transferee trust is governed by a registered retirement savings plan or a registered retirement income fund,

(D) the transferee trust files a written election with the Minister on or before the later of March 1, 2001 and its filing due-date for its taxation year that includes the particular time (or at such later date as is acceptable to the Minister) that this subparagraph apply, and

(E) it can reasonably be considered that the election was not made for the purpose of avoiding tax under Part XI,

(ii) the fair market value of the property at the particular time where

(A) subparagraph (iii) does not apply,

(B) the transferee trust files a written election with the Minister on or before the later of March 1, 2001 and its filing due-date for its taxation year that includes the particular time (or at such later date as is acceptable to the Minister) that this subparagraph apply, and

(C) it can reasonably be considered that the election was not made for the purpose of avoiding tax under Part XI,

(iii) the fair market value of the property at the particular time where

(A) subparagraph (i) does not apply to the qualifying disposition,

(B) the particular time is before 2000,

(C) the transferor is a trust governed by a registered retirement savings plan or a registered retirement income fund, and

(D) the transferee trust is governed by a registered retirement savings plan or a registered retirement income fund, and

(iv) the cost amount to the transferor of the property immediately before the particular time, in any other case;

(d) if the property was depreciable property of a prescribed class of the transferor and its capital cost to the transferor exceeds the cost at which the transferee trust is deemed by this subsection to have acquired the property, for the purposes of sections 13 and 20 and any regulations made for the purpose of paragraph 20(1)(a),

(i) the capital cost of the property to the transferee trust is deemed to be the amount that was the capital cost of the property to the transferor, and

(ii) the excess is deemed to have been allowed to the transferee trust in respect of the property under regulations made for the purpose of paragraph 20(1)(a) in computing income for taxation years that ended before the particular time;

(e) if the property was eligible capital property of the transferor in respect of a business of the transferor,

(i) where the eligible capital expenditure of the transferor in respect of the property exceeds the cost at which the transferee trust is deemed by this subsection to have acquired the property, for the purposes of sections 14, 20 and 24,

(A) the eligible capital expenditure of the transferee trust in respect of the property is deemed to be the amount that was the eligible capital expenditure of the transferor in respect of the property, and

(B) 3/4 of the excess is deemed to have been allowed under paragraph 20(1)(b) to the transferee trust in respect of the property in computing income for taxation years that ended

(I) before the particular time, and

(II) after the adjustment time of the transferee trust in respect of the business, and

(ii) for the purpose of determining after the particular time the amount to be included under subparagraph 14(1)(a)(v) or paragraph 14(1)(b) in computing the transferee trust's income in respect of any subsequent disposition of the property of the business, there shall be added to the value otherwise determined for Q in the definition "cumulative eligible capital" in subsection 14(5) the amount determined by the formula

where

A is the amount, if any, determined for Q in that definition in respect of the business of the transferor immediately before the particular time,

B is the fair market value of the property immediately before the particular time, and

C is the fair market value immediately before the particular time of all eligible capital property of the transferor in respect of the business;

(f) if the property was deemed to be taxable Canadian property of the transferor by this paragraph or paragraph 51(1)(f), 85(1)(i) or 85.1(1)(a), subsection 87(4) or (5) or paragraph 97(2)(c) or 107(2)(d.1), the property is deemed to be taxable Canadian property of the transferee trust;

(g) where the transferor is a related segregated fund trust (in this paragraph having the meaning assigned by section 138.1),

(i) paragraph 138.1(1)(i) does not apply in respect of a disposition of an interest in the transferor that occurs in connection with the qualifying disposition, and

(ii) in computing the amount determined under paragraph 138.1(1)(i) in respect of a subsequent disposition of an interest in the transferee trust where the interest is deemed to exist in connection with a particular life insurance policy, the acquisition fee (as defined by subsection 138.1(6)) in respect of the particular policy shall be determined as if each amount determined under any of paragraphs 138.1(6)(a) to (d) in respect of the policyholder's interest in the transferor trust had been determined in respect of the policyholder's interest in the transferee trust;

(h) if the transferor is a trust to which property had been transferred by an individual (other than a trust),

(i) where subsection 73(1) applied in respect of the property so transferred and it is reasonable to consider that the property was so transferred in anticipation of the individual ceasing to be resident in Canada, for the purposes of paragraph 104(4)(a.3) and the application of this paragraph to a disposition by the transferee trust after the particular time, the transferee trust is deemed after the particular time to be a trust to which the individual had transferred property in anticipation of the individual ceasing to reside in Canada and in circumstances to which subsection 73(1) applied, and

(ii) for the purposes of paragraph (j) of the definition "excluded right or interest" in subsection 128.1(10) and the application of this paragraph to a disposition by the transferee trust after the particular time, where the property so transferred was transferred in circumstances to which this subsection would apply if subsection (1) were read without reference to paragraphs (1)(h) and (i), the transferee trust is deemed after the particular time to be a trust an interest in which was acquired by the individual as a consequence of a qualifying disposition;

(i) if the transferor is a trust (other than a personal trust or a trust prescribed for the purposes of subsection 107(2)), the transferee trust is deemed to be neither a personal trust nor a trust prescribed for the purposes of subsection 107(2);

(j) if the transferor is a trust and a taxpayer disposes of all or part of a capital interest in the transferor because of the qualifying disposition and, as a consequence, acquires a capital interest or part of it in the transferee trust

(i) the taxpayer is deemed to dispose of the capital interest or part of it in the transferor for proceeds equal to the cost amount to the taxpayer of that interest or part of it immediately before the particular time, and

(ii) the taxpayer is deemed to acquire the capital interest or part of it in the transferee trust at a cost equal to the amount, if any, by which

(A) that cost amount

exceeds

(B) the amount by which the taxpayer's loss otherwise determined from the disposition referred to in subparagraph (i) would be reduced because of paragraph 107(1)(c) or (d) if the proceeds under that subparagraph were equal to the fair market value of the capital interest or part of it in the transferor immediately before the particular time;

(k) where the transferor is a trust, a taxpayer's beneficial ownership in the property ceases to be derived from the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor because of the qualifying disposition and no part of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor was disposed of because of the qualifying disposition, there shall, immediately after the particular time, be added to the cost otherwise determined of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferee trust, the amount determined by the formula

where

A is the cost amount to the taxpayer of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor immediately before the particular time,

B is the fair market value immediately before the particular time of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor,

C is the fair market value at the particular time of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor (determined as if the only property disposed of at the particular time were the particular property), and

D is the lesser of

(i) the amount, if any, by which the cost amount to the taxpayer of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor immediately before the particular time exceeds the fair market value of the taxpayer capital interest in the transferor immediately before the particular time, and

(ii) the maximum amount by which the taxpayer's loss from a disposition of a capital interest otherwise determined could have been reduced because of paragraph 107(1)(c) or (d) if the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor had been disposed of immediately before the particular time;

(l) where paragraph (k) applies to the qualifying disposition in respect of a taxpayer, the amount that would be determined under that paragraph in respect of the qualifying disposition if the amount determined for D in that paragraph were nil shall, immediately after the particular time, be deducted in computing the cost otherwise determined of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor;

(m) where paragraphs (j) and (k) do not apply in respect of the qualifying disposition, the transferor is deemed to acquire the capital interest or part of it in the transferee trust that is acquired as a consequence of the qualifying disposition

(i) where the transferee trust is a personal trust, at a cost equal to nil, and

(ii) in any other case, at a cost equal to the excess determined under paragraph (b) in respect of the qualifying disposition; and

(n) if the transferor is a trust and a taxpayer disposes of all or part of an income interest in the transferor because of the qualifying disposition and, as a consequence, acquires an income interest or a part of an income interest in the transferee trust, for the purpose of subsection 106(2), the taxpayer is deemed not to dispose of any part of the income interest in the transferor at the particular time.

Technical Notes: Under paragraph 107.4(3)(a), the transferor's proceeds from the qualifying disposition are generally deemed to be the cost amount of the property. However, provision is made for the transferor to elect another amount, between the cost amount of the property and its fair market value, as proceeds.

Under paragraph 107.4(3)(b), the proceeds determined under paragraph (a) are also generally treated as the cost to the transferee trust of the property. However, this amount is reduced in some cases where the fair market value of the property is less than the cost amount. The reduction in these cases is equal to a hypothetical reduction in the transferor's loss on the disposition of the property. This hypothetical reduction is computed, using the stop-loss rules with regard to partnership interests (subsection 100(4)), trust interests (paragraphs 107(1)(c) and (d)) and shares (subsections 112(3) to (4.2)), on the assumption that the proceeds of disposition are the fair market value of the property rather than its cost amount.

Paragraph 107.4(3)(b) does not, however, apply for the purpose of the foreign property limit under Part XI. For this purpose, except for transfers before 2000 between RRSP trusts and RRIF trusts, the cost amount to the transferor under paragraph 107.4(3)(c) is the cost to the transferee of the same property unless the transferee elects that the cost be the fair market value of the property at the time of its transfer. (It is expected that this election will be used only if the transferee trust does not have information with regard to the cost amount of property from the transferor trust. If, on the other hand, the election is made for the purpose of avoiding Part XI tax, it is invalid.) With regard to the excepted transfers involving RRSPs and RRIFs, the transferee's cost of the property is its fair market value unless the transferee files the election described in subparagraph 107.4(3)(c)(i). (If this election is made for the purpose of avoiding Part XI tax, it is invalid.) For further detail on transfers involving RRSPs and RRIFs see the commentary, including examples, on paragraph (g) of the new definition "disposition" in subsection 248(1).

In addition, where the property is depreciable property or eligible capital property, there are rules in paragraphs 107.4(3)(d) and (e) designed, for the purposes of the capital cost allowance rules in the Act, to put the transferee in the same position as the transferor in the event that the transferee subsequently disposes of the property. These rules are parallel to existing rules in subsection 107(2) for trust distributions to beneficiaries.

Paragraph 107.4(3)(f) provides that, if the property was deemed to be taxable Canadian property of the transferor because of a number of specified provisions in the Act, the property retains that character in the hands of the transferee.

Paragraph 107.4(3)(g) provides that, where the transferor is a related segregated fund trust (as defined in section 138.1 of the Act), paragraph 138.1(1)(i) does not apply in respect of a disposition of an interest in the transferor that occurs in connection with the qualifying disposition. Consequently, no capital loss is provided on the qualifying disposition under paragraph 138.1(1)(i) in respect of load fees associated with a policyholder's interest in the transferor. Paragraph 107.4(3)(g) also ensures that such amounts can ultimately be recognized on a disposition of an interest in the transferee trust.

Paragraph 107.4(3)(h) applies if the transferor was a trust to which property was transferred by an individual (other than a trust) in anticipation of ceasing to reside in Canada and in circumstances to which subsection 73(1) applied. For the purposes of paragraph 104(4)(a.3), the transferee trust is likewise deemed to be a trust to which the individual had transferred property in circumstances to which subsection 73(1) applied and in anticipation of ceasing to reside in Canada. Thus, as a consequence of new paragraph 104(4)(a.3), there may be a deemed disposition by the transferee trust on the individual ceasing to reside in Canada. Paragraph 107.4(3)(h) also applies, where property was transferred by an individual (other than a trust) to the transferor trust in circumstances to which subsection 107.4(3) would apply if no exception under subsection 107.4(1) were made for either transfers to which subsection 73(1) applied or transfers that included the giving to the transferor of any consideration. In these circumstances, the transferee trust is deemed for the purposes of paragraph (j) of the definition "excluded right or interest" in subsection 128.1(10) to be a trust an interest in which was acquired by the individual as a consequence of a qualifying disposition. Thus, gains with regard to an interest in the transferee trust would be required to be recognized in the event that the individual subsequently ceases to reside in Canada.

Paragraph 107.4(3)(i) applies where the transferor was a trust that was neither a personal trust nor a trust prescribed for the purposes of subsection 107(2). In these circumstances, the transferee trust is likewise deemed to be neither a personal trust nor a trust prescribed for the purposes of subsection 107(2).

Paragraph 107.4(3)(j) applies where, as a result of a qualifying disposition from one trust to another trust, a taxpayer disposes of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor trust and acquires a capital interest in the transferee trust. In these circumstances, the taxpayer is deemed to dispose of the capital interest in the transferor trust for proceeds equal to the cost amount to the taxpayer of that interest. The taxpayer is also generally deemed to acquire the interest in the transferee trust at that same cost amount. However, the deemed cost amount to the taxpayer of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferee trust is reduced in some cases where the fair market value of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor trust is less than its cost amount to the taxpayer. The reduction in these cases is equal to a hypothetical reduction in the transferor's loss on the disposition of the property. This hypothetical reduction is computed, using the stop-loss rules with regard to trust interests (paragraphs 107(1)(c) and (d)), on the assumption that the proceeds of disposition are the fair market value of the property rather than its cost amount.

Paragraph 107.4(3)(k) applies where the transferor is a trust and a taxpayer's beneficial ownership in property ceases because of a qualifying disposition to be derived from the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor, but no part of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor was disposed of because of the qualifying disposition. In these circumstances, the taxpayer's cost of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferee trust is increased to reflect the percentage change (attributable to the disposition) in value of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferee trust. However, the cost amount of the taxpayer's interest in the transferee trust is reduced where the fair market value of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor is less than its cost amount to the taxpayer and, had the capital interest in the transferor trust been disposed of, the taxpayer's loss from that hypothetical disposition would have been reduced under the stop-loss rules for trust interests (paragraphs 107(1)(c) and (d)).

Paragraph 107.4(3)(l) generally provides that any amount added under that paragraph in computing the cost to a taxpayer of the taxpayer's capital interest in a transferee trust is deducted in computing the cost to a taxpayer of the taxpayer's capital interest in the transferor. However, the amount of the deduction does not take into account the reduction under paragraph 107.4(3)(k) in respect of the stop-loss rules for trust interests.

Where paragraphs 107.4(3)(j) and (k) do not apply, paragraph 107.4(3)(m) deems the cost to the transferor of the capital interest in the transferee trust acquired on the disposition to be

- where the transferee is a personal trust, nil, and
- in any other case, the excess determined under paragraph 107.4(3)(b).

Paragraph 107.4(3)(n) applies to a qualifying disposition that is a disposition of a property between two personal trusts. Where, because of the qualifying disposition, a taxpayer disposes of an income interest (as defined in subsection 108(1)) in the transferor trust and acquires an income interest in the transferee trust, for the purpose of subsection 106(2) the taxpayer is deemed not to dispose of any part of the income interest in the transferor trust. This measure is limited to personal trusts because an income interest only exists in respect of such trusts.

These amendments apply to dispositions that occur after December 23, 1998. However, in order to ensure that there will be a cost assigned in certain cases to property previously transferred, these amendments also apply, except for the purposes of Part XI of the Act and regulations made for the purpose of that Part, in simplified form to the 1993 and subsequent taxation years. The previous transfers to which the simplified rules apply are transfers (other than transfers to bare trusts) that were not dispositions of property because of paragraph (e) of the definition "disposition" in section 54. No proceeds of dispositions are ascribed to these previous transfers and the stop-loss rules in subsection 107.4(3) do not apply.

Related Provisions: 53(4) — Effect on ACB of trust interest; 104(5.3)(c) — No application where election in effect to postpone deemed disposition; 104(5.8) — Where property transferred from one trust to another; 107.4(4) — Fair market value of capital interest in trust; 257 — Formula cannot calculate to less than zero.

(4) Fair market value of vested interest in trust — Where

(a) a particular capital interest in a trust is held by a beneficiary at any time,

(b) the particular interest is vested indefeasibly at that time,

(c) the trust is not described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1), and

(d) interests under the trust are not ordinarily disposed of for consideration that reflects the fair market value of the net assets of the trust, the fair market value of the particular interest at that time is deemed to be not less than the amount determined by the formula

where

A is the total fair market value at that time of all properties of the trust,

B is the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of a debt owing by the trust at that time or the amount of any other obligation of the trust to pay any amount that is outstanding at that time,

C is the fair market value at that time of the particular interest (determined without reference to this subsection), and

D is the total fair market value at that time of all interests as beneficiaries under the trust (determined without reference to this subsection).

Technical Notes: New subsection 107.4(4) of the Act provides a valuation rule with regard to vested capital interests in certain trusts.

For subsection 107.4(4) to apply at any time to a taxpayer's capital interest in a trust, the following additional conditions must be satisfied:

- the interest is vested indefeasibly at that time,
- the trust is not described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1), (generally trusts relating to employee compensation and retirement savings and trusts deemed to exist for income tax purposes), and
- capital interests in the trust are not ordinarily disposed of for consideration that reflects the fair market value of the net assets of the trust.

In these circumstances, the fair market value of the capital interest is deemed to be not less than its "share" of the total net assets of the trust. More specifically, the fair market value of the capital interest is deemed to be not less than the product obtained by multiplying the fair market value of the net assets (i.e., assets minus liabilities) of the trust by the proportion of the fair market value of the particular interest (determined without reference to subsection 107.4(4)) to the total fair market value of all beneficial interests in the trust (determined without reference to subsection 107.4(4)).

These amendments apply to dispositions of capital interests that occur after December 23, 1998.

Related Provisions: 248(9.2) — Meaning of "vested indefeasibly"; 257 — Formula cannot calculate to less than zero.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 52, will add s. 107.4, subsecs. (1) and (3) applicable

(a) to dispositions that occur after December 23, 1998, and

(b) re 1993 et seq., to transfers of capital property that occurred before December 24, 1998, except that, in its application to transfers before December 24, 1998,

(i) subsec. (1) shall be read as follows:

107.4 (1) For the purpose of this section, a "qualifying disposition" of a property means a transfer of the property to a particular trust that was not a disposition of the property for the purpose of subdivision c because of paragraph (e) of the definition "disposition" in section 54, except where

(a) if the transfer is from another trust to the particular trust,

(i) each trust can reasonably be considered to act as agent for the same beneficiary or beneficiaries in respect of the property transferred, or

(ii) the transferee trust can reasonably be considered to act as agent for the transferor trust in respect of the property transferred; and

(b) in any other case, it is reasonable to consider that the particular trust acts as agent in respect of the property transferred.

(ii) the opening words of subsec. (3) shall be read as follows:

(3) Where at a particular time there is a qualifying disposition of a property by a person or partnership (in this subsection referred to as the "transferor") to a trust (in this subsection referred to as the "transferee trust"), except for the purposes of Part XI and regulations made for the purposes of that Part

(iii) subsec. (3) shall be read without reference to paras. (a), (c), (g) and (h);

(iv) para. (3)(b) shall be read as follows:

(b) the transferee trust's cost of the property is deemed to be the cost amount to the transferor of the property immediately before the particular time;

(v) subsec. (3) shall be read as if each amount determined under cl. 107.4(3)(j)(ii)(B) and the description of D in paragraph 107.4(3)(k) were nil; and

(vi) subpara. 107.4(3)(m)(ii) shall be read as follows:

(ii) in any other case, at a cost equal to the amount determined under paragraph (b) in respect of the qualifying disposition.

Subsecs. (2) and (4) apply to dispositions that occur after December 23, 1998.

Proposed Amendment — 107.4

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: (9) That for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years, ...

(e) the rules for determining the capital gains deduction under section 110.6 of the Act and any other rules of determination under the Act take into account, where appropriate, the change in determination of a taxpayer's taxable capital gain and allowable capital loss from a disposition of a property.

[This is expected to affect 107.4(3)(e)(i)(B) — ed.]

108. (1) Definitions — In this subdivision,

"accumulating income" of a trust for a taxation year means the amount that would be the income of the trust for the year if that amount were

(a) computed without reference to subsections 104(5.1) and (12),

(b) computed as if the greatest amount that the trust was entitled to claim under subsection 104(6) in computing its income for the year were so claimed,

(c) where the trust

(i) is a pre-1972 spousal trust at the end of the year,

(ii) is described in paragraph 104(4)(a), or

(iii) elected under subsection 104(5.3) for a preceding taxation year, computed without reference to subsections 104(4), (5) and (5.2) and 107(4),

(d) where the trust is described in paragraph 104(4)(a) and the taxpayer's spouse referred to in that paragraph died on a day in that year, computed as if any disposition by the trust before the end of that day of capital property, land described in an inventory of the trust, Canadian resource property or foreign resource property had not occurred, and

(e) computed without reference to subsection 12(10.2), except to the extent that that subsection applies to amounts paid to a trust to which paragraph 70(6.1)(b) applies and before the death of the spouse referred to in that paragraph;

Proposed Amendment — Common-law partners

Application: 2000, c. 12 (Bill C-23), Sch. 2, s. 1, will replace "spouse" with "spouse or common-law partner", applicable to 2001 et seq., to come into force on a day to be fixed by order of the Governor in Council. See also the transitional rules reproduced under 248(1)"common-law partner".

Proposed Amendment — 108(1)"accumulating income"

"accumulating income" of a trust for a taxation year means the amount that would be the income of the trust for the year if that amount were computed

(a) without reference to paragraphs 104(4)(a) and (a.1) and subsections 104(5.1), (5.2) and (12) and 107(4),

(b) as if the greatest amount that the trust was entitled to claim under subsection 104(6) in computing its income for the year were so claimed, and

(c) without reference to subsection 12(10.2), except to the extent that that subsection applies to amounts paid to a trust to which paragraph 70(6.1)(b) applies and before the death of the spouse or common-law partner referred to in that paragraph;

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(1), will amend the definition "accumulating income" in subsec. 108(1) to read as above, applicable to 2000 et seq.

Technical Notes: The amount that may be allocated under subsection 104(15) of the Act to a disabled beneficiary for a trust taxation year is limited to the trust's accumulating income for the year. The trust's accumulating income is designed, in part, to ensure that the preferred beneficiary election cannot be used to allocate income and gains under a spousal trust to non-spouse beneficiaries. Under the existing definition, trust income arising from a deemed disposition of trust assets under subsection 104(4), (5) or (5.2) is not included in computing "accumulating income" and cannot be allocated to beneficiaries in the event that the trust is a spousal trust.

The definition "accumulating income" is amended so that the above restriction only applies in connection with the deemed disposition of trust assets that occurs on the death of the spouse beneficiary under a spousal trust. As a consequence of amendments to paragraph 104(4)(a), a similar restriction applies to alter ego trusts and joint partner trusts, as defined in subsection 248(1).

This amendment applies to the 2000 and subsequent taxation years.

This amendment also reflects changes proposed under Bill C-23, the Modernization of Benefits and Obligations Act.

History: The definition "accumulating income" in subsec. 108(1) amended by 1996, c. 21, subsec. 19(1), applicable to trust taxation years that end after July 19, 1995. The definition formerly read:

"accumulating income" of a trust for a taxation year means the amount that would be the income of the trust for the year if this Act were read without reference to

(a) subsections 104(5.1) and (12),

(b) where the trust

(i) is a pre-1972 spousal trust at the end of the year,

(ii) is described in paragraph 104(4)(a), or

(iii) elected under subsection 104(5.3) for a preceding taxation year, subsections 104(4), (5), (5.2) and 107(4), and

(c) subsection 12(10.2), except to the extent that that subsection applies to amounts paid to a trust to which paragraph 70(6.1)(b) applies and before the death of the spouse referred to in that paragraph;

The definition "accumulating income" in subsec. 108(1) amended by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 44(1), applicable to 1991 et seq. The definition formerly read:

> "accumulating income" of a trust for a taxation year means the amount that would, but for subsection 104(12) and, where the trust is a trust described in paragraph 104(4)(a), subsections 104(4), (5), (5.2) and 107(4), be its income for the year;

Pre-RSC History: The definition "accumulating income" was para. 108(1)(a). See Table of Concordance.

Para. 108(1)(a) substituted by 1988, c. 55, subsec. 75(1), applicable to taxation years of trusts commencing after 1987. Para. 108(1)(a) formerly read:

Para. 108(1)(a) amended by 1986, c. 6, subsec. 53(1), to substitute "subsection 104(4), (5) or 107(4)" for "subsection 104(4), (5) or (5.1) or 107(4)", applicable to 1986 et seq.

"beneficiary" under a trust includes a person beneficially interested therein;

Pre-RSC History: The definition "beneficiary" was para. 108(1)(b).

"capital interest" of a taxpayer in a trust means

(a) in the case of a personal trust or a prescribed trust, a right (whether immediate or future and whether absolute or contingent) of the taxpayer as a beneficiary under the trust to, or to receive, all or any part of the capital of the trust, and

(b) in any other case, a right of the taxpayer as a beneficiary under the trust;

Proposed Amendment — 108(1)"capital interest"

"capital interest" of a taxpayer in a trust means all rights of the taxpayer as a beneficiary under the trust, and after 1999 includes a right (other than a right acquired before 2000 and disposed of before March 2000) to enforce payment of an amount by the trust that arises as a consequence of any such right, but does not include an income interest in the trust;

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(2), will amend the definition "capital interest" in subsec. 108(1) to read as above, applicable after 1999.

Technical Notes: Subsection 108(1) of the Act contains the definition "capital interest". In the case of a personal trust, a prescribed trust and certain "grandfathered" trusts, a taxpayer's capital interest encompasses all rights of the taxpayer to receive all or any part of the trust's capital. In any other case, a taxpayer's capital interest generally encompasses all rights of the taxpayer as a beneficiary under the trust.

The definition "capital interest" is amended to expressly provide that a capital interest does not include an income interest in the trust. With the exception of an income interest in a trust, a taxpayer's capital interest in a trust encompasses:

- all rights of the taxpayer as a beneficiary under any type of trust, and
- after 1999, a right (other than a right acquired before 2000 and disposed of before March 2000) to enforce payment by the trust that arises as a consequence of any such rights.

This amendment applies after 1999.

Note, in addition, that an amendment to subsection 104(1) has the effect of excluding a "bare trust" from the definition "trust" in the Act. One of the effects of this amendment is that there will be no capital interests in a "bare trust" for the purposes of the Act.

Related Provisions: 53(2)(h), (i) — Reduction in ACB of capital interest; 248(1)"capital interest" — Definition applies to entire Act; 248(1)"disposition"(d), (h) — Whether transfer by trust is a disposition of capital interest.

Pre-RSC History: The definition "capital interest" was para. 108(1)(c).

That portion of para. 108(1)(c) preceding subpara. (ii) amended by 1988, c. 55, subsec. 75(2), to substitute, in subpara. (i), "a personal trust or a prescribed trust," for "a testamentary trust or a trust no beneficial interest in which was acquired for consideration payable directly or indirectly to the trust or to any person who has made a contribution to the trust by way of a transfer, assignment or other disposition of property," applicable in respect of interests created or materially altered after January 31, 1987 that were acquired after 10 p.m. EST, February 6, 1987.

Para. 108(1)(c) substituted by 1987, c. 46, subsecs. 37(1), (2), applicable in respect of interests created or materially altered after January 31, 1987 that were acquired after 10 p.m. EST, February 6, 1987. Para. 108(1)(c) formerly read:

> (c) "capital interest" of a taxpayer in a trust means a right (whether immediate or future and whether absolute or contingent) of the taxpayer as a beneficiary under the trust to, or to receive, all or any part of the capital of the trust;

"cost amount" to a taxpayer at any time of a capital interest or part thereof, as the case may be, in a trust (other than a trust that is a foreign affiliate of the taxpayer) means, notwithstanding the definition of "cost amount" in subsection 248(1),

Proposed Amendment — 108(1)"cost amount" opening words

"cost amount" to a taxpayer at any time of a capital interest or part of the interest, as the case may be, in a trust (other than a trust that is a foreign affiliate of the taxpayer) means, except for the purposes of section 107.4 and notwithstanding subsection 248(1),

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(3), will amend the opening words of the definition "cost amount" in subsec. 108(1) to read as above, applicable to 1993 et seq.

Technical Notes: The calculation of the "cost amount" of a taxpayer's capital interest in a trust is primarily relevant for the purposes of determining a taxpayer's capital gain from the disposition of the taxpayer's capital interest in a personal trust. Under paragraph 107(1)(a) of the Act, for capital gains calculation purposes, the adjusted cost base (ACB) of a taxpayer's capital interest is generally the greater of the ACB otherwise determined and the cost amount of the taxpayer's interest determined under subsection 108(1).

Under the existing definition, the cost amount of a taxpayer's capital interest in a trust satisfied by way of a distribution of money is equal to the money distributed. The cost amount of a capital interest satisfied by way of the distribution of other property is equal to the sum of the cost amounts to the trust of those properties. In cases where a capital interest is disposed of without any distribution, the cost amount of a taxpayer's capital interest is considered to be the taxpayer's proportionate share of the trust's money on hand and the total cost amount of other trust property, offset by outstanding trust liabilities. The purpose of the existing definition is essentially to give beneficiaries of personal trusts recognition for cost amounts of trust assets, given that the cost of capital and income interests in such trusts will generally be nil because of the operation of subsections 106(1.1) and 107(1.1).

The definition is amended so that it does not apply for the purpose of section 107.4. This amendment applies to the 1993 and subsequent taxation years, in order to be consistent with the coming into force for section 107.4.

(a) where any money or other property of the trust has been distributed by the trust to the taxpayer in satisfaction of all or part of the taxpayer's capital interest (whether on the winding-up of the trust or otherwise), the total of

(i) the money so distributed, and

(ii) all amounts each of which is the cost amount to the trust, immediately before the distribution, of each such other property, and

(iii) [Repealed]

Proposed Addition — 108(1)"cost amount"(a.1)

(a.1) where that time is immediately before the time of the death of the taxpayer and subsection 104(4) or (5) deems the trust to dispose of property at the end of the day that includes that time, the amount that would be determined under paragraph (b) if the taxpayer had died on a day that ended immediately before that time, and

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(4), will add para. (a.1) to the definition "cost amount" in subsec. 108(1), applicable to deaths that occur after 1999.

Technical Notes: New paragraph (a.1) of the definition is introduced to provide a special rule in the event that an individual is deemed to dispose of a capital interest in a trust immediately before the individual's death. If on the individual's death there is also a deemed disposition of trust assets and an immediate subsequent deemed reacquisition because of the operation of amended paragraph 104(4)(a), that deemed reacquisition is considered to occur immediately before the individual's death in order that the "cost amount" of the individual's capital interest reflects the deemed disposition of trust assets. This amendment is intended to prevent double taxation of the same economic gain in these circumstances.

(b) in any other case, the amount determined by the formula

where

A is the total of

(i) all money of the trust on hand immediately before that time, and

(ii) all amounts each of which is the cost amount to the trust, immediately before that time, of each other property of the trust,

B is the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of any debt owing by the trust, or of any other obligation of the trust to pay any amount, that was outstanding immediately before that time,

C is the fair market value at that time of the capital interest or part thereof, as the case may be, in the trust, and

D is the fair market value at that time of all capital interests in the trust;

(b) in any other case, that proportion of the amount, if any, by which the total of all money of the trust on hand immediately before that time and all amounts each of which is the cost amount to the trust, immediately before that time, of a property of the trust exceeds the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of a debt owing by the trust, or of any other obligation of the trust to pay any amount, that was outstanding immediately before that time, that

> (d.1) "designated income" — "designated income" of a trust for a taxation year means the amount that would, but for subsections 20(16), 104(6) and (12) and 105(2) and any regulations made under paragraph 20(1)(a), be the income of the trust for the taxation year determined under section 3 if

Proposed Addition — 108(1)"eligible offset"

"eligible offset" at any time of a taxpayer in respect of all or part of the taxpayer's capital interest in a trust is the portion of any debt or obligation that is assumed by the taxpayer and that can reasonably be considered to be applicable to property distributed at that time in satisfaction of the interest or part of the interest, as the case may be, if the distribution is conditional upon the assumption by the taxpayer of the portion of the debt or obligation;

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(8), will add the definition "eligible offset" to subsec. 108(1), applicable after 1999.

Technical Notes: Subsection 108(1) of the Act is amended to introduce the expression "eligible offset".

A taxpayer's "eligible offset" in respect of all or part of a taxpayer's capital interest in a trust reduces the taxpayer's proceeds of disposition arising from the satisfaction of all or part of that interest, in the event there is a distribution to which amended subsection 107(2) or (2.1) applies. Where such a distribution was conditional upon the assumption by the taxpayer of a debt or obligation, the taxpayer's eligible offset at any time of in respect of that interest is the portion of the debt or obligation assumed by the taxpayer that can reasonably be considered to be applicable to the property distributed at that time in satisfaction of that interest.

This amendment applies after 1999. For further detail on the effect of this amendment, see the notes on amendments to subsections 107(2) and (2.1).

The definition is amended to provide that, after 1999, an income interest also includes a right (other than a right acquired before 2000 and disposed of before March 2000) to enforce payment by the trust that arises as a consequence of a right that is an income interest.

Except as noted above, these amendments apply in respect of interests created or materially altered after January 31, 1987 that were acquired after 10 p.m. EST, February 6, 1987.

"trust" includes an inter vivos trust and a testamentary trust but in subsections 104(4), (5), (5.2), (12), (13.1), (13.2), (14) and (15) and sections 105 to 107 does not include

(a) an amateur athlete trust, an employee trust, a trust described in paragraph 149(1)(o.4) or a trust governed by a deferred profit sharing plan, an employee benefit plan, an employees profit sharing plan, a foreign retirement arrangement, a registered education savings plan, a registered pension plan, a registered retirement income fund, a registered retirement savings plan or a registered supplementary unemployment benefit plan,

Proposed Addition — 108(1)"trust"(a.1)

(a.1) a trust, other than a trust described in paragraph (a) or (d), all or substantially all of the property of which is held for the purpose of providing benefits to individuals each of whom is provided with benefits in respect of, or because of, an office or employment or former office or employment of any individual,

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(6), will add para. (a.1) to the definition "trust" in subsec. 108(1), applicable to 1999 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 108(1) of the Act defines "trust", for the purposes of the 21-year deemed disposition rule and other specified measures, to exclude certain listed trusts. For these purposes, paragraph (f) of the definition excludes unit trusts (as defined in subsection 108(2)) and paragraph (g) of the definition excludes, except as specified, trusts all interests in which have vested indefeasibly and no interest in which may become effective in the future. One of the specified exceptions from the exclusion under paragraph (g) is for trusts described in paragraph 104(4)(a) (which, under the existing law, describes only spousal trusts).

Paragraph (a.1) is added to the definition so that the exclusion from the 21-year deemed disposition rule and other rules applies to a trust (other than a trust already described in paragraph (a) or (d) of the definition) all or substantially all of the property of which is held for the purpose of providing benefits to individuals each of whom is provided with benefits in respect of, or because of, an office or employment or former office or employment. It is generally intended that health and welfare trusts qualify for the exclusion, given that these trusts would not be expected to be described in paragraph (a) or (d) of the definition. This amendment applies to the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

(b) a related segregated fund trust (within the meaning assigned by section 138.1),

(c) an inter vivos trust deemed by subsection 143(1) to exist in respect of a congregation that is a constituent part of a religious organization,

(d) an RCA trust (within the meaning assigned by subsection 207.5(1)),

(e) a trust each of the beneficiaries under which was at all times after it was created a trust referred to in paragraph (a), (b) or (d) or a person who is a beneficiary of the trust only because of being a beneficiary under a trust referred to in any of those paragraphs, or

(e.1) a cemetery care trust or a trust governed by an eligible funeral arrangement, and, in subsections 104(4), (5), (5.2), (12), (14) and (15), does not include

(f) a unit trust, or

(g) a trust (other than a trust described in paragraph 104(4)(a), a trust that has elected under subsection 104(5.3), or a trust that, in its return of income under this Part for its first taxation year ending after 1992, has elected that this subparagraph not apply) all interests in which have vested indefeasibly and no interest in which may become effective in the future.

Proposed Amendment — 108(1)"trust" and, in applying subsections 104(4), (5), (5.2), (12), (14) and (15) and section 106 at any time, does not include

(f) a trust that, at that time, is a unit trust, or

(g) a trust all interests in which, at that time, have vested indefeasibly, other than

(i) an alter ego trust, a joint partner trust or a post-1971 partner trust,

(ii) a trust that has elected under subsection 104(5.3),

(iii) a trust that has, in its return of income under this Part for its first taxation year that ends after 1992, elected that this paragraph not apply,

(iv) a trust that is at that time resident in Canada where the total fair market value at that time of all interests in the trust held at that time by beneficiaries under the trust who at that time are non-resident is more than 20% of the total fair market value at that time of all interests in the trust held at that time by beneficiaries under the trust,

(v) a trust under the terms of which, at that time, all or part of a person's interest in the trust is to be terminated with reference to a period of time (including a period of time determined with reference to the person's death), otherwise than as a consequence of terms of the trust under which an interest in the trust is to be terminated as a consequence of a distribution to the person (or the person's estate) of property of the trust if the fair market value of the property to be distributed is required to be commensurate with the fair market value of that interest immediately before the distribution, or

(vi) a trust that, before that time and after December 17, 1999, has made a distribution to a beneficiary in respect of the beneficiary's capital interest in the trust, if the distribution can reasonably be considered to have been financed by a liability of the trust and one of the purposes of incurring the liability was to avoid taxes otherwise payable under this Part as a consequence of the death of any individual;

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(7), will amend the portion of the definition "trust" in subsec. 108(1) after para. (e.1) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq., except that

(a) it does not apply for the purpose of applying subpara. (g)(iv) of the definition before December 24, 1998; and

(b) where the trust so elects in writing and files the election with the Minister of National Revenue on or before the trust's filing-due date for the taxation year of the trust that includes the day on which the amending legislation is assented to (or any later day that is acceptable to the Minister), subpara. (g)(v) of the definition, as it applies before 2001, shall be read as follows:

(v) a trust any interest in which may become effective in the future, or

Technical Notes: The definition is also amended so that the exclusion under paragraphs (f) and (g) also apply for the purpose of the rules in section 106 governing the taxation of income interests.

Paragraph (g) of the definition is amended so that the exclusion can apply to a trust all interests in which have vested indefeasibly, without regard to whether an interest in the trust becomes effective in the future. However, under new subparagraph (g)(v), the exclusion generally does not apply to a trust under the terms of which all or part of any person's interest is to be terminated with reference to a period of time.

The elimination of the requirement that there be no future interest and its replacement by subparagraph (g)(v) applies to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years. However, where the trust so elects in writing before its filing-due date for its taxation year that includes the date of Royal Assent (or before such later day as is acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue), these amendments apply only after 2000.

EXAMPLE

A trust provides for beneficiary A to receive income from property for the lifetime of beneficiary A with the remainder interest to go beneficiary B (or the estate of beneficiary B, if beneficiary B does not survive beneficiary A). The above amendment clarifies that the above exclusion from the 21-year rule does not apply in this case. On the other hand, where new units in a trust can be issued by a commercial trust for fair market value consideration, the above amendment ensures that the trust is not precluded from qualifying for the exclusion.

New subparagraph (g)(iv) of the definition ensures that the above exclusion does not apply to a trust resident in Canada that has a non-resident beneficiary, unless the total fair market value of the interests of the non-resident beneficiaries is 20% or less of the total fair market value of the interests in the trust. This 20% level is meant to accommodate a limited level of foreign ownership of interests in the trust, given that gains in respect of those interests may not be subject to Canadian taxes because of income tax treaties. This amendment applies after December 23, 1998.

New subparagraph (g)(vi) of the definition ensures that the above exclusion does not apply to a trust that, after December 17, 1999, made a distribution to a beneficiary in respect of the beneficiary's capital interest in the trust, if the distribution may reasonably be considered to have been financed by a liability of the trust and one of the purposes of incurring the liability was to avoid taxes otherwise payable under Part I of the Act as a consequence of the death of any individual. This provision parallels new paragraph 104(4)(a.2), described in the notes above.

Except as noted above, these amendments apply to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

(B) not less than 95% of its income for each of the relevant periods (computed without regard to subsections 49(2.1) and 104(6) and as though each of those periods were a taxation year) was derived from, or from the disposition of, investments described in subparagraph (iii),

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(9), will amend para. 108(2)(b) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 108(2) of the Act describes the requirements for a trust to be a "unit trust" (as defined in subsection 248(1)). A trust must be a unit trust to qualify as a "mutual fund trust" under subsection 132(6).

Paragraph 108(2)(b) is amended to allow a trust to qualify as a unit trust throughout a taxation year, provided that at all times throughout the year the trust meets the conditions set out in either paragraph 108(2)(a) or (b). This ensures that a trust will not lose its status as a unit trust only because it converts from a unit trust described in paragraph 108(2)(b) to a unit trust described in paragraph 108(2)(a) or vice versa.

Paragraph 108(2)(b) is intended, because of its closing words, to require a trust more than 20% of the assets of which consist of real property situated in Canada to qualify as a unit trust under paragraph 108(2)(b) only if its units are listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada. These closing words are replaced by subparagraph 108(2)(b)(vi). This subparagraph reflects past amendments to subsection 108(2).

Paragraph 108(2)(b) is also amended to add a reference to "hypothec" to the list of properties the combination of which must account for at least 80 per cent of a trust's total properties. This amendment is made to ensure that the Act appropriatly reflects both the civil law of the province of Quebec and the law of other provinces.

These amendments apply to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

(c) the fair market value of the property of the trust at the end of 1993 was primarily attributable to real property (or an interest in real property), the trust was a unit trust throughout any calendar year that ended before 1994 and the fair market value of the property of the trust at the particular time is primarily attributable to property described in paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition "qualified investment" in section 204, real property (or an interest in real property) or any combination of those properties.

Letter from Department of Finance, July 6, 1999:

Dear [xxx]

This is in reply to your letter of June 23, 1999 to Simon Thompson concerning subsection 108(2) of the Income Tax Act.

We understand that your client currently meets the provision for closed-end unit trusts under paragraph 108(2)(b), and that your client expects, following the introduction of a redemption feature to its units, to meet the provision for open-end unit trusts under paragraph 108(2)(a). We understand that, as a result of its conversion from a closed-end to an open-end trust, your client will no longer have met, during the period before its conversion, the provision for closed-end trusts as it will not have met the requirements of paragraph 108(2)(b) throughout the taxation year.

We would agree that, in these circumstances, it would be appropriate to extend the application of subsection 108(2) to allow a trust to meet the definition of unit trust throughout a taxation year provided that at all times throughout the taxation year the trust meets the conditions set out in either paragraph 108(2)(a) or (b). We will recommend that this amendment apply after 1997.

Thank you for writing.

Yours sincerely,

Brian Ernewein
Director
Tax Legislation Division
Tax Policy Branch

(6) Variation of trusts — Where at any time the terms of a trust are varied

(a) for the purposes of subsections 104(4), (5) and (5.2), subject to paragraph (b), the trust is, at and after that time, deemed to be the same trust as, and a continuation of, the trust immediately before that time;

(b) for greater certainty, paragraph (a) does not affect the application of paragraph 104(4)(a.1); and

(c) for the purposes of paragraph 53(2)(h), subsection 107(1), paragraph (j) of the definition "excluded right or interest" in subsection 128.1(10) and the definition "personal trust" in subsection 248(1), no interest of a beneficiary under the trust before it was varied is considered to be consideration for the interest of the beneficiary in the trust as varied.

(7) Interests acquired for consideration — For the purposes of paragraph 53(2)(h), subsection 107(1), paragraph (j) of the definition "excluded right or interest" in subsection 128.1(10) and the definition "personal trust" in subsection 248(1),

(a) an interest in a trust is deemed not to be acquired for consideration solely because it was acquired in satisfaction of any right as a beneficiary under the trust to enforce payment of an amount by the trust; and

(b) where all the beneficial interests in a particular inter vivos trust acquired by way of the transfer, assignment or other disposition of property to the particular trust were acquired by

(i) one person, or

(ii) two or more persons who would be related to each other if

(A) a trust and another person were related to each other, where the other person is a beneficiary under the trust or is related to a beneficiary under the trust, and

(B) a trust and another trust were related to each other, where a beneficiary under the trust is a beneficiary under the other trust or is related to a beneficiary under the other trust, any beneficial interest in the particular trust acquired by such a person is deemed to have been acquired for no consideration.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 53(12), will amend subsec. 108(6) to read as above, and add subsec. 108(7). subsec. 108(6) applicable to 2000 et seq. and subsec. 108(7) applicable after December 23, 1998.

Technical Notes: Subsection 108(6) of the Act applies where the terms of a trust are varied. It provides that the application of the 21-year deemed disposition rule is not affected by the variation.

Subsection 108(6) is amended to ensure that no interest of a beneficiary under the trust before it was varied is considered to be consideration for the interest of the beneficiary in the trust as varied. This rule is relevant for a number of specified provisions in the Act, which refer to trust interests being acquired for consideration.

This amendment applies to the 2000 and subsequent taxation years. The amendment is intended to extend to all trust variations, including variations that occurred before 2000.

A "personal trust" is defined in subsection 248(1) of the Act as essentially a testamentary trust or an inter vivos trust in which no beneficial interest was acquired for consideration payable to the trust or to a contributor to the trust. An existing special rule within the definition generally ensures that one person (or two or more related persons) can make contributions to a trust and retain an interest under the trust without the prohibition on consideration being considered to apply. This existing rule also applies for the purposes of paragraph 53(2)(h), which deals with the calculation of the adjusted cost bases of certain trust interests.

The definition is amended so that this special rule is removed from the definition. Instead, the special rule is now provided in new subsection 108(7). The special rule also is to apply, under subsection 108(7), for the purposes of amended subsection 107(1), strictly as a consequence of the amendments to that provision and for the purposes of paragraph (j) of the new definition "excluded right or interest" in subsection 128.1(10).

New subsection 108(7) also ensures that, for the purposes of the above-noted provisions, an interest in a trust is deemed not to be acquired for consideration solely because of the acquisition of the interest in satisfaction of any right as a beneficiary under the trust to enforce payment from the trust.

New subsection 108(7) applies after December 23, 1998.

History: Subsec. 108(6) added by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 44(9), applicable to variations occurring after February 11, 1991.

Pre-RSC History: S. 109 repealed by 1988, c. 55, s. 76, applicable to 1988 et seq. (See s. 118.) S. 109 formerly read:

109. (1) Deductions permitted by individuals — For the purpose of computing the taxable income of an individual for a taxation year, there may be deducted such of the following amounts as are applicable:

(a) married status — in the case of an individual who, during the year, was a married person who supported his spouse, an amount equal to the aggregate of

(i) $1,600, and

(ii) $1,400 less the amount, if any, by which the spouse's income for the year or, where the individual was living apart from his spouse at the end of the year by reason of a breakdown of their marriage, the spouse's income for the year while married, exceeds $200;

(b) wholly dependent persons — in the case of an individual not entitled to a deduction under paragraph (a) who, during the year,

(i) was an unmarried person or a married person who neither supported nor lived with his spouse and was not supported by his spouse, and

(ii) whether by himself or jointly with one or more other persons maintained a self-contained domestic establishment (in which the individual lived) and actually supported therein a person who, during the year, was

(A) except in the case of a child of the individual, resident in Canada,

(B) wholly dependent for support on the taxpayer, or the taxpayer and such person or persons, as the case may be, and

(C) connected, by blood relationship, marriage or adoption, with the taxpayer, or the taxpayer and such person or persons, as the case may be, an amount equal to the aggregate of

(iii) $1,600, and

(iv) $1,400 less the amount, if any, by which the income for the year of the dependent person exceeds $200;

(c) single status — in the case of an individual not entitled to a deduction under paragraph (a) or (b), $1,600;

(d) dependants — for each dependant of the individual for the year, an amount equal to,

(i) if the dependant has not attained the age of 18 years before the end of the year, the amount, if any, by which

(A) 12 times the family allowance payable for a month in the year under subsection 3(1) of the Family Allowances Act, 1973 in respect of a child

exceeds

(B) ½ of the amount, if any, by which the income for the year of the dependant exceeds the amount by which $1,600 exceeds twice the amount determined under clause (A) for the year, and

(ii) if the dependant has attained the age of 18 years before the end of the year,

(A) in the case of a person dependent on the individual by reason of mental or physical infirmity, $550 less the amount, if any, by which the income for the year of the dependant exceeds $1,050, and

(B) in any other case, the amount, if any, by which

(I) twice the amount determined under clause (i)(A) for the year

exceeds

(II) ½ of the amount, if any, by which the income for the year of the dependant exceeds the amount by which $1,600 exceeds twice the amount determined under subclause (I) for the year, but not exceeding, where the dependant is, in respect of the individual or his spouse, a person referred to in subparagraph (6)(b)(iii) or (iv), the amounts expended by the individual during the year for the support of that dependant;

(e), (f), (g) [Repealed]

(h) over 65 years — in the case of an individual who, before the end of the year, has attained the age of 65 years, $1,000; and

(a) no deduction may be made under that paragraph by any taxpayer in respect of more than one person;

(b) where a taxpayer is entitled to a deduction under that paragraph in respect of any person described therein neither the taxpayer nor any other taxpayer is entitled to a deduction under paragraph (1)(d) in respect of that person; and

(c) no more than one taxpayer is entitled to a deduction under that paragraph in respect of the same person or the same domestic establishment, and in the event of failure on the part of two or more taxpayers otherwise entitled to a deduction under that paragraph to agree as to the taxpayer by whom the deduction may be made, no deduction thereunder may be made by either or any of them.

(3) [Repealed]

(5) Partial dependency — Where more than one taxpayer is, in respect of a taxation year, entitled to deduct an amount under paragraph (1)(d) in respect of the same dependant, the aggregate of all amounts deductible for the year by those taxpayers in respect of that dependant shall not exceed the maximum amount that would be deductible under that paragraph for the year by any one of those taxpayers in respect of that dependant if that taxpayer were the only taxpayer entitled to deduct an amount under that paragraph in respect of that dependant and where the taxpayers cannot agree as to what portion of the amount each can deduct, the Minister may fix the portions.

Proposed Amendment — 110(1)(d)(ii)(A)

(A) the amount payable by the taxpayer to acquire the security under the agreement (determined without reference to any change in the value of a currency of a country other than Canada relative to Canadian currency after the agreement was made) is not less than the amount by which

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 54(1), will amend the opening words of cl. 110(1)(d)(ii)(A) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Under subsection 7(1) of the Act, an individual who acquires a share of a corporation or a unit of a mutual fund trust (a "security") under an employee security option agreement (or disposes of rights under such an agreement) may be treated as having received a benefit from employment. Where certain conditions are met, paragraph 110(1)(d) allows the individual to deduct 1/4 of the amount included in income as a result of the application of subsection 7(1).

Fair Market Value Test

One of the conditions to be eligible for the 1/4 deduction is that the amount payable under the option for the security (the "option price") not be less than the fair market value of the security at the time the option was granted. Paragraph 110(1)(d) provides for the option price to be determined without reference to changes in the value of a foreign currency relative to Canadian currency during the period from the time the option is granted to the time the security is acquired. This is to eliminate the effect of foreign exchange fluctuations.

Paragraph 110(1)(d) is amended [110(1)(d)(ii)(A) — ed.] so that changes in the value of a foreign currency at any time after the option is granted are disregarded. This reflects the fact that, if there has been a disposition of rights rather than a security acquisition, the period described above is indeterminable.

Arm's Length Test

Another condition to be eligible for the 1/4 deduction is that the individual be dealing at arm's length, immediately after the option is granted, with the entity that granted the option (the "grantor") and with each entity not dealing at arm's length with the grantor. If the option under which the security is acquired (or rights are disposed of) was acquired as a result of one or more exchanges of options under subsection 7(1.4), the arm's length test must be satisfied after each such exchange but not after the granting of the original option.

The arm's length test [110(1)(d)(iii) — ed.] is amended in two ways. First, the requirement that the individual be dealing at arm's length with any entity not dealing at arm's length with the grantor is replaced with a requirement that the individual be dealing at arm's length with his or her employer and with the entity whose securities can be acquired under the option. There is no change to the requirement that the individual be dealing at arm's length with the grantor. Second, it is amended so that, if there has been an exchange of options under subsection 7(1.4), the arm's length test is applied with respect to the original option and not with respect to any subsequent exchange of options.

These amendments apply to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years. They undo recent legislative changes that had the unintended effect of both tightening the arm's length test (extending it to all entities not dealing at arm's length with the grantor) and relaxing the test (ceasing to apply it to the original option after an exchange). They also further relax the arm's length test by restricting its application to the original option when there has been an exchange of options.

Letter from Department of Finance, September 14, 1999: Thank you for your letter of July 26, 1999 concerning recent amendments made to paragraph 110(1)(d) of the Income Tax Act.

You express concern that these amendments have resulted in an expansion of the requirements which must be satisfied in order for an individual who exercises or disposes of a stock option to be eligible for the deduction provided for under paragraph 110(1)(d). In particular, the requirement that the individual be dealing at arm's length with certain corporations has been expanded to include any corporation with which the corporation granting the option (the "optionor") does not deal at arm's length, even if the corporation in question is neither the individual's employer nor the corporation whose shares are the subject of the option.

As you note, the intent of the arm's length test is to ensure that employees who are in a position of influence or control are not able to convert their ordinary employment income (which is fully taxable) into stock options which benefit from the deduction under paragraph 110(1)(d). We agree with your assessment that this objective can be achieved by limiting the application of the arm's length requirement to the employee's employer, the optionor and the corporation whose shares can be acquired under the option, and are prepared to recommend that the Act be amended accordingly.

You have also asked that consideration be given to amending paragraph 110(1)(d)[(iii) — ed.] so that, where there has been one or more exchanges of stock options to which subsection 7(1.4) applied, the arm's length test is applied only to the original option and not to each subsequent exchange. Again, we agree with your assessment that such a change should not provide any opportunity for abuse since the application of subsection 7(1.4) is limited to situations where there is a value for value exchange. We also appreciate the fact that such a change should achieve considerable simplification and provide greater certainty as to an individual's eligibility for a deduction under paragraph 110(1)(d). Therefore, we are prepared to recommend that the Act be amended accordingly.

We would recommend that these proposed amendments have the same coming-into-force as the recent amendments. In other words, we would recommend that paragraph 110(1)(d) as amended apply to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

We wish to thank you again for bringing these issues to our attention.

Yours sincerely,

Proposed Amendment — Deduction on donating stock option shares

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Donation of Stock Option Shares

(24) That where

(a) an individual acquires, after February 27, 2000 and before 2002, a security under an option that was granted to the individual as an employee of a corporation or mutual fund trust,

(b) the individual disposes of the security, in the year it is acquired and not more than 30 days after its acquisition, by donating it to a qualified donee that is not a private foundation,

(c) the individual is entitled to deduct an amount under paragraph 110(1)(d) of the Act in respect of the employment benefit determined under subsection 7(1) of the Act in connection with the acquisition of the security, and

(d) if there were a capital gain determined in connection with the individual's disposition of the security, the gain would qualify for the reduced inclusion rate under paragraph 38(a.1) of the Act, the individual be entitled to deduct, in computing taxable income for the year in which the security is acquired, an additional amount equal to 1/3 of the amount that would be the employment benefit if the fair market value of the security at the time of acquisition were the lesser of that value and the security's fair market value at the time of donation.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Charitable Donations of Shares Acquired with Employee Stock Options

The 1997 budget halved the inclusion rate on capital gains arising from charitable donations made before 2002 of listed securities, such as shares, bonds, bills, warrants and futures.

An individual who acquires a share under an employee stock option plan is required to include in income an employment benefit equal to the fair market value of the share, less any amounts paid to acquire the share. If certain conditions are satisfied, the individual is allowed to deduct part of the employment benefit in order to effectively tax the benefit at capital gains rates.

However, where the employee exercises the option in order to donate the share to a charity, there is no provision to reduce the tax burden on the employment benefit to parallel the reduced capital gains inclusion rate for donations of publicly-traded securities. The budget therefore proposes to introduce such a provision in order to provide parallel treatment between the two forms of gift-giving. In such circumstances, the individual will be allowed to deduct an additional third of the employment benefit. Taking into account the changes proposed in this budget to increase the existing stock option deduction from a quarter to a third, only a third of the employment benefit will be subject to tax.

If the value of the share at the time it is donated is less than when the option was exercised, the additional deduction will be reduced to provide the appropriate amount of tax assistance.

To be eligible for this measure, the share must be donated in the year and within 30 days of the option being exercised. Also, the share will have to meet the existing criteria for the reduced capital gains inclusion rate for donations of publicly-traded securities. The restrictions on eligible charities will also be the same. In addition, the conditions for the existing stock option deduction will have to be satisfied — principally, that the share be an ordinary common share and that amounts payable to acquire the share be no less than the fair market value of the share at the time the option is granted.

The measure will also apply to the donation of units of a mutual fund trust acquired under an employee option plan.

The measure will apply to securities acquired after February 27, 2000, and donated before 2002.

(3) Gifts of capital property — Where at any time

(a) a corporation makes a gift of

(i) capital property to a donee described in paragraph (1)(a), (b) or (d), or

(ii) in the case of a corporation not resident in Canada, real property situated in Canada to a prescribed donee who provides an undertaking, in a form satisfactory to the Minister, to the effect that the property will be held for use in the public interest, and

(b) the fair market value of the property at that time exceeds its adjusted cost base to the corporation, such amount, not greater than the fair market value and not less than the adjusted cost base to the corporation of the property at that time, as the corporation designates in its return of income under section 150 for the year in which the gift is made shall, if the making of the gift is proven by filing with the Minister a receipt containing prescribed information, be deemed to be its proceeds of disposition of the property and, for the purposes of subsection (1), the fair market value of the gift made by the corporation.

Proposed Amendment — 110.1(3)

such amount, not greater than the fair market value otherwise determined and not less than the adjusted cost base to the corporation of the property at that time, as the corporation designates in its return of income under section 150 for the year in which the gift is made is, if the making of the gift is proven by filing with the Minister a receipt containing prescribed information, deemed to be its proceeds of disposition of the property and, for the purposes of subsection (1), the fair market value of the gift made by the corporation.

Notes: This measure was first released in a news release on June 3, 1999.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 55(1), will amend the closing words of subsec. 110.1(3) to read as above, applicable in respect of gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Technical Notes: Section 110.1 of the Act provides for the deductibility in computing income of charitable donations and certain other gifts.

Subsection 110.1(3) of the Act provides that, if a corporation donates capital property to a charity, it may elect a value between the adjusted cost base and the fair market value of the donated property to be treated both as the proceeds of disposition for the purpose of calculating its capital gain and the amount of the gift for the purpose of the deduction allowed for charitable donations under subsection 110.1(1).

The amendment to subsection 110.1(3) is complementary to the amendment of subsection 110.1(5) of the Act, which provides that the fair market value of a gift of a covenant, easement or servitude in respect of ecologically sensitive land will not be considered to be less than the decrease in value of the subject land that resulted from the making of the gift. The amendments clarify that a corporate donor may nevertheless report a reduced amount as proceeds of disposition of such a gift, where the value of the gift for the purpose of the charitable donations deduction is reduced accordingly. This amendment applies in respect of gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 56, will amend the opening words of subsec. 110.6(12) to read as above, applicable to 2000 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 110.6(12) of the Act generally allows spousal trusts access to the unused lifetime capital gains exemption of the beneficiary spouse, for the taxation year of the spousal trust in which the beneficiary spouse dies. Under paragraph 104(4)(a), there is generally a deemed disposition for a post-1971 partner trust once the beneficiary spouse dies.

Subsection 110.6(12) is amended to ensure that it does not apply to alter ego trusts or joint spousal trusts (as newly defined in subsection 248(1)). This amendment is consequential to the extension of paragraph 104(4)(a) to provide for deemed dispositions for alter ego trusts and joint partner trusts.

exceeds

(ii) the amount if any, determined under paragraph (a) of the definition "cumulative gains limit" in subsection (1) in respect of the taxpayer's spouse at the end of the taxation year in which the spouse died,

(9) Exception — In this section, a taxpayer's non-capital loss, net capital loss, restricted farm loss, farm loss and limited partnership loss for a taxation year during which the taxpayer was not resident in Canada shall be determined as if

(a) throughout the portion of the year referred to in paragraph 114(b), where section 114 applies to the taxpayer in respect of the year, and

Proposed Amendment — 111(9)(a)

(a) in the part of the year throughout which the taxpayer was non-resident, if section 114 applies to the taxpayer in respect of the year, and

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 57, will amend para. 111(9)(a) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 111 of the Act establishes the extent to which a taxpayer is permitted to deduct amounts in computing taxable income for a taxation year in respect of losses of other years. Subsection 111(9) sets out special limits that apply to carryovers from taxation years during which a taxpayer is not resident in Canada.

Subsection 111(9) is amended, for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment replaces a reference to the portion of the year referred to in paragraph 114(b) with a reference to the part of the year throughout which the taxpayer was non-resident. This keeps the reference in step with the changes to section 114. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

(b) throughout the year, in any other case, the taxpayer had no income other than income described in any of subparagraphs 115(1)(a)(i) to (vi), the taxpayer's only taxable capital gains, allowable capital losses and allowable business investment losses were from dispositions of taxable Canadian property (other than treaty-protected property) and the taxpayer's only other losses were losses from the duties of an office or employment performed by the taxpayer in Canada and businesses (other than treaty-protected businesses) carried on by the taxpayer in Canada.

Related Provisions: 80(1)"excluded property" — Properties to which debt forgiveness rules do not apply; 115(1)(b.1) — Treaty-protected property losses not usable against taxable Canadian property gains; 115(1)(c) — Treaty-protected business losses not usable against Canadian business profits; 161(7) — Effect of carryback of loss. See additional Related Provisions and Definitions at end of s. 111.

History: The closing words of subsec. 111(9) amended by 1999, c. 22, s. 28, applicable for the purpose of computing taxable income and taxable income earned in Canada for 1998 et seq. The closing words formerly read:

> the taxpayer had no income other than income described in subparagraphs 115(1)(a)(i) to (vi), the taxpayer's only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses were taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from the disposition of taxable Canadian property and the taxpayer's only losses were allowable business investment losses and losses from duties of an office or employment performed by the taxpayer in Canada and businesses carried on by the taxpayer in Canada.

That portion of subsec. 111(9) following para. (b) amended by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 49(2), applicable to 1991 et seq. and with respect to the computation of taxable income and taxable income earned in Canada for those years. That portion formerly read:

> the taxpayer had no income other than income described in subparagraphs 115(1)(a)(i) to (vi), the taxpayer's only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses were taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from the disposition of taxable Canadian property and the taxpayer's only losses were losses from businesses carried on by the taxpayer in Canada.

Pre-RSC History: Subsec. 111(9) was para. 111(8)(c).

Para. 111(8)(c) amended by 1986, c. 55, subsec. 34(5), to substitute "restricted farm loss, farm loss and limited partnership loss" for "restricted farm loss and farm loss", applicable after February 25, 1986.

Para. 111(8)(c) substituted by 1984, c. 1, subsec. 54(5), applicable with respect to computation of taxable income for 1983 et seq. and with respect to losses determined for 1983 et seq. Para. 111(8)(c) formerly read:

> (c) reference in section 3 — a reference to any amount determined under any paragraph or subparagraph of section 3 for a taxation year shall be read as a reference to,
> (i) in the case of a taxpayer to whom section 114 applies in respect of the year, the amount determined under any such paragraph or subparagraph for the year for the purposes of section 114, and
> (ii) in the case of a taxpayer who at no time in the year was resident in Canada, the amount determined under any such paragraph or subparagraph for the year for the purposes of section 115.

(10) Fuel tax rebate loss abatement — Where in a particular taxation year a taxpayer received an amount (in this subsection referred to as a "rebate") as a fuel tax rebate under subsection 68.4(2) or (3.1) of the Excise Tax Act, in computing the taxpayer's non-capital loss for a taxation year (in this subsection referred to as the "loss year") that is one of the 7 taxation years preceding the particular year, there shall be deducted the lesser of

(a) the amount determined by the formula

where

A is the total of all rebates received by the taxpayer in the particular year,

B is the total of all amounts, in respect of rebates received by the taxpayer in the particular year, repaid by the taxpayer under subsection 68.4(7) of that Act, and

C is the total of all amounts, in respect of rebates received in the particular year, deducted under this subsection in computing the taxpayer's non-capital losses for other taxation years; and

(b) such amount as the taxpayer claims, not exceeding that portion of the taxpayer's non-capital loss for the loss year (determined without reference to this subsection) that would be deductible in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the particular year if the taxpayer had sufficient income for the particular year from businesses carried on by the taxpayer in the particular year.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 58, will amend subsec. 112(2.2) to read as above, applicable in respect of dividends received after 1998.

Technical Notes: Section 112 of the Act deals with the treatment of dividends received by a corporation resident in Canada from another corporation.

Subsection 112(2.2) of the Act denies the intercorporate dividend deduction for dividends on certain shares that are guaranteed by a specified financial institution. This subsection is amended by dividing its provisions among three new subsections — (2.2), (2.21) and (2.22) — in order to improve readability. In addition, a new exception is set out in new paragraph 112(2.21)(d), described below.

Amended subsection (2.2) sets out the basic conditions under which a share is considered to be a guaranteed share.

Related Provisions: 84(4.3) — Deemed dividend where paid-up capital of guaranteed share reduced; 87(4.2) — Amalgamations; 112(2.21) — Exceptions; 112(2.22) — Interpretation; 248(1) — "amount" of a stock dividend; 248(10) — Series of transactions; 248(14) — Specified financial institution — corporations deemed related; 258(3) — Deemed interest on preferred shares. See additional Related Provisions and Definitions at end of s. 112.

Subsec. 112(2.2) substituted by 1980-81-82-83, c. 48, subsec. 61(1). By 1980-81-82-83, c. 48, subsec. 61(3), subsec. 112(2.2) is applicable after October 23, 1979. Subsec. 112(2.2) formerly read:

> (2.2) No deduction may be made under subsection (1) or (2) in computing the taxable income of a particular corporation (other than a corporation described in any of paragraphs (2.1)(a) to (c)) in respect of a dividend on a share of the capital stock of a corporation that was acquired after October 23, 1979 if a corporation described in any of paragraphs (2.1)(a) to (c) or a person related thereto, or a partnership or trust of which any such corporation or a person related thereto is a member or beneficiary, as the case may be, is or may be required to

Proposed Addition — 112(2.21), (2.22)

(2.21) Exceptions — Subsection (2.2) does not apply to a dividend received by a particular corporation on

(a) a share that is at the time the dividend is received a share described in paragraph (e) of the definition "term preferred share" in subsection 248(1);

(b) a grandfathered share, a taxable preferred share issued before December 16, 1987 or a prescribed share;

(c) a taxable preferred share issued after December 15, 1987 and of a class of the capital stock of a corporation that is listed on a prescribed stock exchange where all guarantee agreements in respect of the share were given by one or more of the issuer of the share and persons that are related (otherwise than because of a right referred to in paragraph 251(5)(b)) to the issuer unless, at the time the dividend is paid to the particular corporation, dividends in respect of more than 10 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares to which the guarantee agreement applies are paid to the particular corporation, or the particular corporation and specified persons in relation to the particular corporation; or

(d) a share

(i) that was not acquired by the particular corporation in the ordinary course of its business,

(ii) in respect of which the guarantee agreement was not given in the ordinary course of the guarantor's business, and

(iii) the issuer of which is, at the time the dividend is paid, related (otherwise than because of a right referred to in paragraph 251(5)(b)) to both the particular corporation and the guarantor.

Technical Notes: New subsection 112(2.21) of the Act sets out exceptions specifying shares to which the guaranteed share rule in amended subsection 112(2.2) does not apply. Paragraphs 112(2.21)(a) to (c) set out the exceptions formerly contained in paragraphs 112(2)(c) to (e).

Paragraph 112(2.21)(d) sets out a new exception for certain shares held within a corporate group. The exception applies where two general conditions are met. First, the shares must not have been acquired by the holder in the ordinary course of its business, and the guarantee agreement must not have been given in the ordinary course of business of the party that gave it. Second, the issuer of the share must be related to both the holder and the guarantor, otherwise than because of an option or other right referred to in paragraph 251(5)(b) of the Act.

Letter from Department of Finance, April 13, 1999:

Dear [xxx]

SUBJECT: Guaranteed Preferred Shares

I am writing in reply to your letter of February 19, 1999 to Mr. Len Farber proposing a technical amendment to the Income Tax Act (the "Act") to provide an exception to the application of subsection 112(2.2), which deals with so-called "guaranteed preferred shares".

The special preferred share rules in the act were enacted in order to deal with various types of after-tax financing transactions in which a corporation that is not in a taxable position (as a result of losses, excess tax credits, etc.) effectively passes tax benefits on to other parties using preferentially-taxed shares.

The general policy behind the preferred share rules is to limit the tax benefits associated with structuring such financings using equity rather than debt. However, a number of provisions in the rules provide relief from this limitation of benefits in the case of certain transactions involving companies that are members of a single corporate group. As a result of these exceptions, certain types of after-tax financing are effectively permitted within a corporate group. Examples of such relief include the exemption in the "term preferred share" rules for shares not acquired in the ordinary course of business of the financial institution that holds the shares, and the exemption from the special issuer and holder taxes in the case of "taxable preferred shares" where the holder has a "substantial interest" in the issuer.

There is presently no such in-house financing exception in the guaranteed preferred share rules in subsection 112(2.2). The absence of similar relief in that case may be a result of the fact that one would not normally expect to see shares issued by one member in a corporate family to another member being subject to a guarantee given by a third member of the family. Your submission, however, illustrates a case where, because of minority shareholders, it might be reasonable for a corporation to require a guarantee from a related party.

Upon review of the matter, we are satisfied that it would be consistent with the overall scheme of the preferred share rules to provide a limited exception for certain intra-group financing transactions in the guaranteed share context. [This is now in 112(2.21)(d) — ed.] Specifically, the proposed exemption would provide that subsection 112(2.2) does not apply to a dividend received on a share if:

(a) the issuer was, at the time the dividend was received, related (otherwise than by reason of a right referred to in paragraph 251(5)(b) to both the holder of the share and party giving the guarantee agreement;

(b) the share was not acquired by the holder in the ordinary course of the business carried on by the holder; and

(c) the guarantee agreement was not given in the ordinary course of the business carried on by the guarantor.

The first requirement ensures that the transaction is between members of a corporate group. The requirements that the acquisition of the share and the granting of the guarantee not take place in the ordinary course of business maintain consistency with the term preferred share rules, of which the guaranteed share rules are an extension. These latter requirements ensure that the share transaction is not a substitute for a lending transaction that would otherwise be undertaken in the course of a business.

We will recommend that an amendment to the Act to introduce such an exception be included in a future package of amendments, probably the next technical bill. We will also recommend that the proposed exception apply with respect to dividends received after 1998, regardless of the date of issue of the share.

As you know, I cannot offer any assurance that either the Minister of Finance or Parliament will agree with the recommendations that we intend to make in this regard. Nonetheless, I hope that this statement of our position is helpful.

Yours sincerely,

Brian Ernewein

Proposed Amendment — 113(1)(b)(i)(A)

(A) the corporation's relevant tax factor for the year,

Application: The June 22, 2000 draft legislation, subsec. 16(1), will amend cl. 113(1)(b)(i)(A) to read as above, applicable after 2000.

Technical Notes: Subsection 113(1) of the Act permits a resident corporation to deduct specified amounts in respect of dividends received from a foreign affiliate out of the exempt, taxable and pre-acquisition surplus of the foreign affiliate. The amounts so deductible are determined largely with reference to Part LIX of the Regulations. The deductions under paragraphs 113(1)(b) and (c) with regard to dividends out of taxable surplus are also determined with reference to the resident corporation's "relevant tax factor".

Subsection 113(1) is amended to explicitly link the "relevant tax factor" to the resident corporation receiving the dividends and the taxation year in which the dividends are received. This is consistent with the more explicit definition of "relevant tax factor" described above in the commentary on subsection 95(1).

This amendment applies after 2000.

114. Individual resident in Canada for only part of year — Notwithstanding subsection 2(2), subject to subsection 94.2(5) the taxable income for a taxation year of an individual who is resident in Canada throughout part of the year and non-resident throughout another part of the year is the amount, if any, by which Application: The June 22, 2000 draft legislation, s. 17, will amend the opening words of s. 114 to read as above, applicable to 2001 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 114 of the Act provides rules for computing the taxable income of an individual who is resident in Canada for a period or periods in a taxation year, and is non-resident for the rest of the year. Amendments to section 114 were contained in a detailed Notice of Ways and Means Motion tabled on June 5, 2000.

Section 114 is amended so that it is subject to paragraph 94.2(5)(c), a rule that applies in connection with interests in foreign investment entities that are subject to the mark-to-market regime under section 94.2. Paragraph 94.2(5)(c) is, however, only relevant to individuals who cease to be, and later become, resident in Canada in the same taxation year. For further detail, see the commentary on new subsection 94.2(5).

This amendment applies to the 2001 and subsequent taxation years.

Proposed Amendment — 114

114. Individual resident in Canada for only part of year — Notwithstanding subsection 2(2), the taxable income for a taxation year of an individual who is resident in Canada throughout part of the year and non-resident throughout another part of the year is the amount, if any, by which

(a) the amount that would be the individual's income for the year if the individual had no income or losses, for the part of the year throughout which the individual was non-resident, other than

(i) income or losses described in paragraphs 115(1)(a) to (c), and

(ii) income that would have been included in the individual's taxable income earned in Canada for the year under subparagraph 115(1)(a)(v) if the part of the year throughout which the individual was non-resident were the whole taxation year

exceeds the total of

(b) the deductions permitted by subsection 111(1) and, to the extent that they relate to amounts included in computing the amount determined under paragraph (a), the deductions permitted by any of paragraphs 110(1)(d), (d.1), (d.2) and (f), and

(c) any other deduction permitted for the purpose of computing taxable income to the extent that

(i) it can reasonably be considered to be applicable to the part of the year throughout which the individual was resident in Canada, or

(ii) if all or substantially all of the individual's income for the part of the year throughout which the individual was non-resident is included in the amount determined under paragraph (a), it can reasonably be considered to be applicable to that part of the year.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 59, will amend s. 114 to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 114 of the Act provides rules for computing the taxable income of an individual (often referred to as a "part-year resident") who is resident in Canada for some period or periods in a taxation year, and is non-resident for the rest of the year.

In its current form, section 114 in effect applies a two-stage computation. First, it adds the individual's income for the resident part of the year and the individual's taxable income earned in Canada (a term defined in subsection 115(1) of the Act) for the non-resident part of the year, in each case as though the part were the whole year. Second, it allows those deductions (or parts of deductions) in computing taxable income that can reasonably be considered to apply to the resident part of the year.

This division of the year into separate parts can produce unclear and perhaps inconsistent effects. For example, assume that an individual who emigrates from Canada on June 30 holds shares of a Canadian company that are not listed on a prescribed exchange, with an adjusted cost base of $100 and a fair market value of $160 on emigration. Under proposed amendments to section 128.1 of the Act, the individual is treated as having disposed of the shares and realized the $60 accrued gain before ceasing to be resident in Canada, and as having reacquired the shares, as a non-resident, at a cost of $160. Assume further that the individual actually disposes of the shares on September 30 of the same year, for $140.

On these facts, the individual has a gain of $60 in the resident part of the year, and a loss of $20 in the non-resident part. The result is an overall gain of $40, assuming that the post-departure loss can offset the pre-departure gain. However, the separate calculation under section 114 of the resident-period income and the non-resident period taxable income earned in Canada makes it uncertain that the two can be offset in this way.

Section 114 is amended to avoid such uncertainties, as well as to simplify the application of the rule. The starting-point for calculating a part-year resident's taxable income under amended section 114 is, in paragraph 114(a), the individual's income for the year, counting only those amounts of income and losses for the non-resident period that are included in computing taxable income earned in Canada under paragraphs 115(1)(a) to (c) of the Act.

Paragraphs 114(b) and (c) set out the deductions that the part-year resident may take in computing taxable income. Paragraph 114(b) allows the deduction of loss carryovers permitted by subsection 111(1) of the Act. It also allows the deductions permitted by paragraphs 110(1)(d), (d.1) and (d.2) (the non-taxable 1/4 of employee stock option and prospector's and grubstaker's share benefits) and paragraph 110(1)(f) (various social benefits, amounts exempt from Canadian tax under a tax treaty, and income from employment with certain international organizations), to the extent these relate to amounts that have been included in computing the paragraph 114(a) amount. Paragraph 114(c) allows any other deduction that the Act permits in computing taxable income. A deduction under paragraph 114(c) is allowed to the extent the deduction either can reasonably be considered to be applicable to the resident period or, if all or substantially all of the individual's income for the non-resident period is included in the paragraph 114(a) amount, can reasonably be considered to apply to the non-resident period.

In the example described above, amended section 114 will include both the resident-period gain and the non-resident-period loss in computing the single paragraph 114(a) income amount. The part-year resident will thus be treated as having realized a gain of $40 for the year as a whole.

Amended section 114 applies to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years. A number of consequential amendments ensure that these changes are reflected in other provisions of the Act that refer to section 114.

Proposed Repeal — 114.1

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 59, will repeal s. 114.1, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 114.1 of the Act is a technical rule that applies a special reading of paragraphs 115(2)(b), (b.1) and (c) of the Act, for the purpose of applying section 114, to ensure that certain time references in those paragraphs accommodate cases to which section 114 applies. With the restructuring of section 114, this rule is no longer needed. Section 114.1 is repealed for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

Division D — Taxable Income Earned in Canada by Non-Residents

115. (1) Non-resident's taxable income [earned] in Canada [and taxable Canadian property] — For the purposes of this Act, the taxable income earned in Canada for a taxation year of a person who at no time in the year is resident in Canada is the amount, if any, by which the amount that would be the non-resident person's income for the year under section 3 if

(a) the non-resident person had no income other than

(i) incomes from the duties of offices and employments performed by the non-resident person in Canada,

Proposed Amendment — 115(1)(a)(i)

(i) incomes from the duties of offices and employments performed by the non-resident person in Canada and, if the person was resident in Canada at the time the person performed the duties, outside Canada,

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 60(1), will amend subpara. 115(1)(a)(i) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq. except that if an individual who ceased at any time after 1992 and before October 2, 1996 to be resident in Canada elects under clause 78(1) (see Proposed Amendment to 128.1(4)(b)) in respect of that cessation of residence, subpara. 115(1)(a)(i), as amended, applies to income received by the individual after that cessation of residence.

Technical Notes: Section 115 of the Act determines the amount of a non-resident person's income that is subject to tax under Part I of the Act. This amount is referred to as the non-resident's "taxable income earned in Canada".

Subsection 115(1) of the Act provides the general rules to be applied in calculating a non-resident's "taxable income earned in Canada". Paragraphs 115(1)(a) to (c) describe the conditions that apply in computing a non-resident's taxable income earned in Canada, while paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f) describe the deductions that are available for the purpose of that computation.

Paragraphs 115(1)(a) to (c) set out special assumptions that are applied in computing the taxable income earned in Canada of a non-resident taxpayer. The general effect of these paragraphs, in conjunction with the deduction provided for treaty-protected income because of the reference to paragraph 110(1)(f) in paragraph 115(1)(d), is to include in this computation only income and losses from sources in Canada, and of those only amounts that are not treaty-protected.

Subparagraph 115(1)(a)(i) includes in this computation income from the duties of offices and employments that the non-resident person in Canada performs in Canada. Subparagraph 115(1)(a)(i) is amended to include as well income from offices and employments performed by the non-resident person outside of Canada, if the person was resident in Canada at the time the duties were performed. This ensures that if an individual who is a former resident of Canada receives, as a non-resident, income relating to work the individual performed outside Canada at a time when the individual was resident in Canada, the income is subject to Canadian tax.

This amendment generally applies to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years. In addition, if an individual ceased to be resident in Canada after 1992 and before October 2, 1996, and the individual so elects [see under 128.1(4)(b) — ed.], this amendment applies to income received by the individual after that cessation of residence. The election in effect backdates the explicit exclusion of certain income rights and trust interests from the deemed disposition immediately before emigration. The basis for excluding the rights in question from the deemed disposition is that they generally represent entitlements to future income that will itself be subject to Canadian tax when it is received by a non-resident. Linking the application of amended subparagraph 115(1)(a)(i) to the election ensures that the Act does tax that income, where it relates to employment exercised abroad by a resident of Canada.

(ii) incomes from businesses carried on by the non-resident person in Canada,

(iii) taxable capital gains from dispositions described in paragraph (b),

(iii.1) the amount by which the amount required by paragraph 59(3.2)(c) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year exceeds any portion of that amount that was included in computing the non-resident person's income from a business carried on by the non-resident person in Canada,

(iii.2) amounts required by section 13 to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year in respect of dispositions of properties to the extent that those amounts were not included in computing the non-resident person's income from a business carried on by the non-resident person in Canada,

(iii.21) the amount, if any, included under section 56.3 in computing the non-resident person's income for the year,

(iii.3) in any case where, in the year, the non-resident person carried on a business in Canada described in any of paragraphs (a) to (g) of the definition "principal-business corporation" in subsection 66(15), all amounts in respect of a Canadian resource property that would be required to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year under this Part if the non-resident person were resident in Canada at any time in the year, to the extent that those amounts are not included in computing the non-resident person's income by virtue of subparagraph (ii) or (iii.1),

(iv) the amount, if any, by which any amount required by subsection 106(2) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year as proceeds of the disposition of an income interest in a trust resident in Canada exceeds the amount in respect of that income interest that would, if the non-resident person had been resident in Canada throughout the year, be deductible under subsection 106(1) in computing the non-resident person's income for the year,

(iv.1) the amount, if any, by which any amount required by subsection 96(1.2) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year as proceeds of the disposition of a right to a share of the income or loss under an agreement referred to in paragraph 96(1.1)(a) exceeds the amount in respect of that right that would, if the non-resident person had been resident in Canada throughout the year, be deductible under subsection 96(1.3) in computing the non-resident person's income for the year,

(v) in the case of a non-resident person described in subsection (2), the total determined under paragraph (2)(e) in respect of the non-resident person, and

(vi) the amount that would have been required to be included in computing the non-resident person's income in respect of a life insurance policy in Canada by virtue of subsection 148(1) or (1.1) if the non-resident person had been resident in Canada throughout the year,

(b) the only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses referred to in paragraph 3(b) were taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from dispositions at any time in the year of property or an interest therein (in this Act referred to as "taxable Canadian property") that was

(i) real property situated in Canada,

(ii) a capital property used by the non-resident person in carrying on a business in Canada, other than

(I) real property situated in Canada,

(II) Canadian resource properties, and

(III) timber resource properties,

(vi) a share otherwise described in subparagraph (iv) or (v) that is listed on a prescribed stock exchange, or a share of the capital stock of a mutual fund corporation, if, at any time during the 5-year period that ends at that time, the non-resident person, persons with whom the non-resident person did not deal at arm's length, or the non-resident person together with all such persons owned 25% or more of the issued shares of any class of the capital stock of the corporation that issued the share,

(vii) an interest in a partnership where, at any particular time during the 12-month period that ends at that time, the fair market value of all of the properties of the partnership each of which was

Proposed Amendment — 115(1)(b)

(b) the only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses referred to in paragraph 3(b) were taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from dispositions of taxable Canadian properties (other than treaty-protected properties), and

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 60(2), will amend para. 115(1)(b) to read as above, applicable after October 1, 1996, except that, in its application to dispositions that occurred before the 1998 taxation year, para. 115(1)(b) shall be read as follows:

(b) the only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses referred to in paragraph 3(b) were taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from dispositions of taxable Canadian properties, and

Technical Notes: Paragraph 115(1)(b) lists the types of property (called "taxable Canadian property" or TCP) in respect of which taxable gains and allowable capital losses are considered in the calculation of a non-resident's taxable income earned in Canada. As a result of the relocation of the general TCP definition to subsection 248(1) of the Act, paragraph 115(1)(b) can be greatly simplified. In its new form, the paragraph simply refers to taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses on TCP that is not "treaty-protected property" (as defined in subsection 248(1) of the Act).

Amended paragraph 115(1)(b) generally applies after October 1, 1996. Since the definition (and the concept) of "treaty-protected property" was introduced only with the 1998 Budget [see 115(1)(b.1) — ed.], and applies for the 1998 and later taxation years, a transitional version of amended paragraph 115(1)(b) omits the reference to treaty-protected property for dispositions that occur before the 1998 taxation year.

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (re taxpayer emigration), October 2, 1996: [See under 248(1)"taxable Canadian property" — ed.]

(b.1) notwithstanding paragraph (b), the taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses referred to in paragraph 3(b) did not include taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from dispositions at any time in the year of taxable Canadian property that was treaty-protected property of the non-resident at that time, and

Proposed Repeal — 115(1)(b.1)

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 60(2), will repeal para. (b.1), applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Paragraph 115(1)(b.1) excludes from the computation of a non-resident's taxable income earned in Canada any taxable capital gain or allowable capital loss from the disposition of a taxable Canadian property that was treaty-protected property of the non-resident. Since this exclusion now forms part of amended paragraph 115(1)(b), paragraph 115(1)(b.1) can be repealed.

(c) the only losses for the year referred to in paragraph 3(d) were losses from duties of an office or employment performed by the person in Canada and businesses (other than treaty-protected businesses) carried on by the person in Canada and allowable business investment losses in respect of property any gain from the disposition of which would, because of this subsection, be included in computing the person's taxable income earned in Canada,

exceeds the total of

(d) the deductions permitted by subsection 111(1) and, to the extent that they relate to amounts included in computing the amount determined under any of paragraphs (a) to (c), the deductions permitted by any of paragraphs 110(1)(d), (d.1), (d.2) and (f) and subsection 110.1(1),

(e) the deductions permitted by any of subsections 112(1) and (2) and 138(6) in respect of a dividend received by the non-resident person, to the extent that the dividend is included in computing the non-resident person's taxable income earned in Canada for the year, and

(f) where all or substantially all of the non-resident person's income for the year is included in computing the non-resident person's taxable income earned in Canada for the year, such of the other deductions permitted for the purpose of computing taxable income as may reasonably be considered wholly applicable.

(c) the only losses for the year referred to in paragraph 3(d) were losses from duties of an office or employment performed by the person in Canada and businesses carried on by the person in Canada and allowable business investment losses in respect of property any gain from the disposition of which would, because of this subsection, be included in computing the person's taxable income earned in Canada,

(a) to a person who was obliged on April 26, 1995 to acquire the property pursuant to the terms of an agreement in writing made on or before that day (and, for the purpose of this paragraph, a person shall be considered not to be obliged to acquire property where the person can be excused from the obligation if there is a change to the Act or if there is an adverse assessment under the Act); or

(b) pursuant to a prospectus or similar document filed with the relevant securities authority before April 27, 1995.

Para. 115(1)(b) formerly read:

Technical Notes: Subsection 115(2) applies, in certain special circumstances, to tax remuneration and specified other amounts received by a non-resident. The paragraphs are amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, to update their language to reflect current drafting styles. The amendments make no substantive change to the paragraphs.

(ii) amounts that would be required by paragraph 56(1)(n) or (o) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year if the non-resident person were resident in Canada throughout the year and the reference in the appli-

(3) Property deemed to include interests and options — For the purpose of this section, a property described in subparagraphs (1)(b)(i) to (xii) is deemed to include any interest therein or option in respect thereof, whether or not such property is in existence.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 60(4), will repeal subsec. 115(3), applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Subsection 115(3) of the Act provides that, for the purposes of section 115 of the Act, taxable Canadian property includes an interest in, or an option in respect of, a property, regardless of whether or not the property is in existence. Because the definition "taxable Canadian property" has been moved from subsection 115(1) to subsection 248(1) of the Act, and the new definition contains in paragraph (l) a similar rule for interests and options, subsection 115(3) is no longer needed and is repealed, effective after October 1, 1996.

Related Provisions: 248(4) — Interest in real property.

History: Subsec. 115(3) amended by 1998, c. 19, subsec. 132(2), applicable after April 26, 1995, except in respect of the disposition of a property before 1996

(a) to a person who was obliged on April 26, 1995 to acquire the property pursuant to the terms of an agreement in writing made on or before that day (and, for the purpose of this paragraph, a person shall be considered not to be obliged to acquire property where the person can be excused from the obligation if there is a change to the Act or if there is an adverse assessment under the Act); or

(b) pursuant to a prospectus or similar document filed with the relevant securities authority before April 27, 1995.

(3) Property deemed to include interests and options — For the purpose of this section, a property described in subparagraphs (1)(b)(i) to (ix) shall be deemed to include any interest therein or option in respect thereof, whether or not such property is in existence.

(a) the taxation year of the non-resident person that would otherwise have included the particular time shall be deemed to have ended at such time and a new taxation year shall be deemed to have commenced immediately thereafter;

(b) the non-resident person or any partnership of which the non-resident person was a member immediately after the particular time shall be deemed, for the purpose only of computing the non-resident person's income earned in Canada for the taxation year that is deemed to have ended, to have disposed immediately before the particular time of each Canadian resource property that was owned by the non-resident person or by the partnership immediately after the particular time and to have received therefor immediately before the particular time proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value thereof at the particular time; and

(c) the non-resident person or any partnership of which the non-resident person was a member immediately after the particular time shall be deemed, for the purpose only of computing the non-resident person's income earned in Canada for a taxation year commencing after the particular time, to have reacquired immediately after the particular time, at a cost equal to the amount deemed by paragraph (b) to have been received by the non-resident person or the partnership as the proceeds of disposition therefor, each property deemed by that paragraph to have been disposed of.

116. (1) Disposition by non-resident person of certain property — If a non-resident person proposes to dispose of any taxable Canadian property (other than property described in subsection (5.2) and excluded property) the non-resident person may, at any time before the disposition, send to the Minister a notice setting out

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 61(1), will amend the opening words of subsec. 116(1) to read as above, applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Section 116 of the Act establishes procedures for collecting tax from non-residents on the disposition of taxable Canadian property, Canadian resource properties, and certain other properties.

Where a non-resident plans to dispose of property the proceeds from the disposition of which are subject to Canadian tax, the non-resident can obtain a "clearance certificate" from the Minister of National Revenue. The certificate, which is provided as well to the prospective purchaser, verifies that the non-resident vendor has made arrangements for the payment of any resulting tax. Without such a certificate, the purchaser may be required to remit a portion of the purchase price to the Receiver General.

Subsections 116(1), (5.1) and (5.2) set out some of the rules and procedures for this process. These subsections are amended, with application after October 1, 1996, to reflect the amended definition "taxable Canadian property" in subsection 248(1) of the Act. In particular, that amended definition clarifies that a property's status as taxable Canadian property does not depend on its being disposed of; this allows the references in these subsections to be simplified.

(a) the name and address of the person to whom proposes to dispose of the property (in this section referred to as the "proposed purchaser");

(b) a description of the property sufficient to identify it;

(c) the estimated amount of the proceeds of disposition to be received by the non-resident person for the property; and

(d) the amount of the adjusted cost base to him [the non-resident person] of the property at the time of the sending of the notice.

(6) Definition of "excluded property" — For the purposes of this section, "excluded property" of a non-resident person means

(a) property described in subparagraph 115(1)(b)(xii);

Proposed Amendment — 116(6)(a), (a.1)

(a) a property that is a taxable Canadian property solely because a provision of this Act deems it to be a taxable Canadian property;

(a.1) a property (other than real property situated in Canada, a Canadian resource property or a timber resource property) that is described in an inventory of a business carried on in Canada by the person;

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 61(4), will amend para. 116(6)(a) to read as above, and add para. (a.1), applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: The various rules in section 116 of the Act, which provides a withholding procedure for purchasers of certain properties, do not apply where the property is excluded property. "Excluded property" is defined in subsection 116(6).

Paragraph 116(6)(a) provides that any property referred to in subparagraph 115(1)(b)(xii) of the Act (property that is deemed by a provision of the Act to be taxable Canadian property) is excluded property. Due to the amended definition "taxable Canadian property" in subsection 248(1) of the Act, paragraph 116(6)(a) is amended, effective after October 1, 1996, to remove the reference to subparagraph 115(1)(b)(xii), and to provide that a property is excluded property if it is a taxable Canadian property solely because it is deemed to be so by a provision of the Act.

New paragraph 116(6)(a.1) provides that property described in an inventory of a business carried on in Canada is excluded property for the purposes of section 116 of the Act. This new provision is a result of the change to paragraph (b) of the definition "taxable Canadian property" in subsection 248(1), which now includes as taxable Canadian property the inventory of a business carried on in Canada. Effective after October 1, 1996, new paragraph 116(6)(a.1) excludes such inventory from the requirements of section 116. However, the exclusion does not apply to inventory that is real property situated in Canada, a Canadian resource property or a timber resource property.

(b) a share of a class of the capital stock of a corporation that is listed on a prescribed stock exchange, or an interest in the share;

(c) a unit of a mutual fund trust;

(d) a bond, debenture, bill, note, mortgage or similar obligation; or

(e) any other property that is prescribed to be excluded property.

Related Provisions: 87(10) — New share issued on amalgamation of public corporation deemed to be listed on prescribed stock exchange.

History: Paras. 116(6)(a) and (b) amended by 1998, c. 19, subsec. 133(4), applicable after April 26, 1995, except in respect of the disposition of a property before 1996

(a) to a person who was obliged on April 26, 1995 to acquire the property pursuant to the terms of an agreement in writing made on or before that day (and, for the purpose of this paragraph, a person shall be considered not to be obliged to acquire property where the person can be excused from the obligation if there is a change to the Act or if there is an adverse assessment under the Act); or

(b) pursuant to a prospectus or similar document filed with the relevant securities authority before April 27, 1995.

Paras. 116(6)(a) and (b) formerly read:

(a) property described in subparagraph 115(1)(b)(ix);

(b) a share of the capital stock of a public corporation, or an interest therein;

Proposed Amendment — Allowing Provinces to Impose Tax on Income

Department of Finance/CCRA news release, January 25, 2000: Government Outlines Measures to Make Tax Systems More Flexible for Provinces and Territories

Finance Minister Paul Martin and National Revenue Minister Martin Cauchon today released the document Federal Administration of Provincial Taxes: New Directions, which outlines recent measures that will give provinces and territories greater tax policy flexibility.

"The federal government has taken the initiative of offering provinces and territories the option to levy their personal income taxes on either taxable income or basic federal tax," said Mr. Martin. "This is the biggest change in federal-provincial-territorial tax collection arrangements in over 30 years. It will allow the provinces and territories to pursue their own policy objectives while insulating their revenue bases from ongoing federal initiatives to reduce taxes."

A tax-on-income system eliminates the impact of changes to federal tax rates and credits on provincial-territorial revenues. At the same time, maintaining a common federal-provincial-territorial taxable income base will preserve the following benefits associated with the federal-provincial-territorial Tax Collection Agreements (TCAs):

- uniformity across provinces and territories with respect to what income should be taxed by both levels of government;
- a single form for taxpayers;
- a single tax collection agency; and
- substantial cost savings for the provinces and territories as a result of the federal government collecting their taxes generally free of charge — over the past five years the provinces and territories have saved some $1.5 billion as a result of the federal government administering their taxes.

"New guidelines have also been developed to allow for federal collection of a much broader range of provincial and territorial taxes," said Minister Cauchon. "The tax collection guidelines establish a simpler system, now in place, that is objective and transparent." Under the guidelines, the costs charged to provinces and territories are graduated to reflect the degree to which their taxes are harmonized with their federal counterparts.

The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) asserts that the TCAs have worked well. In its 1997 Canada Review the OECD said, "The benefits of decentralized taxing authority can be achieved without sacrificing a harmonized and administratively simple tax system by federal tax collection agreements. This has been a success story in the case of income taxes in Canada."

Backgrounders providing additional details on the tax-on-income model and the new guidelines are attached [not reproduced here — ed].

Note re Provincial Income Tax: In addition to the tax under Part I of the federal Act, as above, an individual who resides in or has income earned in any of the provinces is also subject to provincial income tax. Except for Quebec, which collects its own tax on separate income tax returns, each other province imposes a tax that is expressed as a percentage of the tax otherwise payable under Part I of the federal Act and is collected for the province by the federal government on a joint tax return. For rates and surtaxes see introductory pages.

Proposed Amendment — Ecological Gifts

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Donations of Ecological Gifts

(22) That the provisions of the Act relating to ecological gifts be modified to

(a) halve the income inclusion rate for capital gains from such gifts (other than gifts made to a private foundation) made after February 27, 2000,

(b) require the donor to file with the return of income for the taxation year in which the gift was made a document obtained from the Minister of the Environment certifying, for the purposes of the Act relating to charitable gifts, the fair market value of the gift as determined by that Minister,

(c) provide a donor with a right to appeal to the Tax Court of Canada a redetermination by that Minister of the fair market value of a gift that has been made, and

(d) provide that such a valuation apply for all purposes of the Act relating to charitable gifts for the two-year period following the time of the last determination or redetermination of the value.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Ecologically Sensitive Lands

The protection of Canada's natural heritage, and especially its species at risk, is a critical objective of the Government. The 1995 budget announced incentives for ecological gifts to the Government of Canada, provincial governments, Canadian municipalities or approved registered charities established for the purpose of protecting Canada's environmental heritage. To be eligible for the special provisions, a gift must be a property certified as ecologically sensitive by the Minister of the Environment. The preservation of these properties is critical to the Government's strategy for the protection of species at risk and the promotion of Canada's system of national and provincial parks and other environmental objectives. This strategy emphasizes providing assistance to encourage Canadians to take voluntary action to protect species and to make responsible stewardship an easy choice.

Donations of ecologically sensitive land from individuals are eligible for the charitable donations tax credit, while those from corporations are eligible for a charitable donation deduction. These provisions apply to transfers of title as well as to covenants, easements and servitudes established under common law, the Civil Code in Quebec, or provincial or territorial legislation allowing for their establishment. Further, ecological gifts are exempt from the rules which would otherwise limit the amount of charitable donations eligible for tax assistance in a year to 75 per cent of net income.

Normally, the value of a donated property is determined to be the price that a purchaser would pay for the property on the open market. As there is no established market for covenants, easements and servitudes, the fair market value of such restrictions on land use is difficult to determine. To provide greater certainty in making these valuations, the 1997 budget introduced a measure to deem the value of these gifts to be not less than the resulting decrease in the value of the land.

The budget proposes a further enhancement of the incentives for the protection of ecologically sensitive lands, including areas containing habitat for species at risk. Specifically, it is proposed that the income inclusion be reduced by one-half in respect of capital gains arising from gifts of ecologically sensitive land and related easements, covenants and servitudes to qualified donees other than private foundations.

Because of the amount of tax assistance offered and the difficulty of valuing such donations, it is proposed that the value of all ecological gifts be determined by a special process to be established by the Minister of the Environment. The value determined by the Minister of the Environment may be appealed to the Tax Court of Canada after an irrevocable gift has been made. This valuation process, together with the certification of the ecological importance of the property, will help to ensure that such donations are effectively and efficiently directed toward the protection of Canada's natural heritage.

These measures will be effective for ecological gifts made after February 27, 2000.

The measures with respect to ecologically sensitive land are examples of how the tax system can be used to support the Government's overall environmental policy. Other examples include accelerated depreciation for energy conservation equipment and tax relief for ethanol and methanol used in gasoline-blended fuels.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 63(1), will amend subsec. 118.1(4) to read as above, applicable to 2000 et seq., and where a taxpayer or a taxpayer's legal representative so notifies the Minister of National Revenue in writing before 2002 of the intention of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's legal representative that this amendment apply in respect of a gift made after 1996 and before 2000, this amendment applies to the taxation year in which the gift was made.

Technical Notes: Section 118.1 of the Act provides the tax credit that may be claimed by individuals who make charitable donations, gifts to the Crown and certain gifts of cultural property and ecologically sensitive land. Donors may carry forward unused claims for up to five years.

Subsection 118.1(4) of the Act treats a gift made in the year of an individual's death as having been made in the preceding year to the extent that it was not deducted in the year of death. Proposed Amendment — Designation of insurance, RRSP or RRIF proceeds to charity

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Charitable Donations Tax Credit

(21) That the charitable donations tax credit be extended to apply in respect of amounts that are paid directly to a qualified donee as a beneficiary, as a consequence of an individual's death that occurs after 1998, under

(a) a life insurance policy under which the individual was the policyholder and the individual's life was insured,

(b) the individual's coverage under a group life insurance policy under which the individual's life was insured, or

(c) a registered retirement savings plan or registered retirement income fund under which the individual was the annuitant.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Charitable Donations: Designations in Favour of Charity

An individual who is an annuitant under a registered retirement savings plan (RRSP) or registered retirement income fund (RRIF) or the owner of a life insurance policy may wish to have the proceeds in respect thereof donated to a charity on the individual's death. There are two common ways of achieving this goal:

- the individual's will can provide for a cash bequest of the proceeds to the charity; or
- without making any provision in the individual's will, the individual can designate that the proceeds be paid directly to the charity under the terms of the RRSP, RRIF or insurance policy.

In either case, the individual's estate is responsible for satisfying the individual's income tax liabilities on the individual's death.

Under current income tax rules, donations that are made by way of a donor's will qualify for the charitable donations tax credit on death. [See 118.1(5) — ed.] However, donations made as a consequence of a direct designation do not qualify for the credit. In such circumstances, the charitable donations tax credit would not be available to offset income tax arising because of the taxation of an RRSP or RRIF on death. This can lead to liquidity problems for an estate.

In order to provide consistency in the income tax rules in this regard, the budget proposes to extend the charitable donations tax credit to donations of RRSP, RRIF and insurance proceeds that are made as a consequence of direct beneficiary designations. This measure will apply in respect of an individual's death that occurs after 1998.

Related Provisions: 38(a.1)(ii) — Gift of publicly-traded securities made on death; 39(1)(a)(i.1) — Gain on disposition not capital gain; 70(5) — Deemed disposition of property immediately before death; 118.1(4) — Carryback of gift made in year of death. See additional Related Provisions and Definitions at end of s. 118.1.

History: Subsec. 118.1(5) amended by 1998, c. 19, subsec. 22(6), applicable to gifts made after July 1997 Subsec. 118.1(5) formerly read:

> (5) Where an individual by the individual's will makes a gift to a donee described in subsection (1), the gift shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been made by the individual in the taxation year in which the individual dies.

(6) Gift of capital property — Where, at any time, whether by the individual's will or otherwise, an individual makes a gift of

(a) capital property to a donee described in the definition "total charitable gifts", "total Crown gifts" or "total ecological gifts" in subsection (1), or

(b) in the case of an individual who is a non-resident person, real property situated in Canada to a prescribed donee who provides an undertaking, in a form satisfactory to the Minister, to the effect that such property will be held for use in the public interest, and the fair market value of the property at that time exceeds its adjusted cost base to the individual, such amount, not greater than the fair market value and not less than the adjusted cost base to the individual of the property at that time, as the individual or the individual's legal representative designates in the individual's return of income under section 150 for the year in which the gift is made shall, if the making of the gift is proven by filing with the Minister a receipt containing prescribed information, be deemed to be the individual's proceeds of disposition of the property and, for the purposes of subsection (1), the fair market value of the gift made by the individual.

and the fair market value of the property otherwise determined at that time exceeds its adjusted cost base to the individual, such amount, not greater than the fair market value and not less than the adjusted cost base to the individual of the property at that time, as the individual or the individual's legal representative designates in the individual's return of income under section 150 for the year in which the gift is made is, if the making of the gift is proven by filing with the Minister a receipt containing prescribed information, deemed to be the individual's proceeds of disposition of the property and, for the purposes of subsection (1), the fair market value of the gift made by the individual.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 63(2), will amend the closing words of subsec. 118.1(6) to read as above, applicable in respect of gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Technical Notes: Subsection 118.1(6) of the Act provides that, if an individual donates capital property to a charity, the individual may elect a value between the adjusted cost base and the fair market value of the donated property to be treated both as the proceeds of disposition for the purpose of calculating the individual's capital gain and the amount of the gift for the purpose of calculating the tax credit allowed for charitable donations under subsection 118.1(3) of the Act.

The amendment to subsection 118.1(6) of the Act is complementary to the amendment of subsection 118.1(12) of the Act, which provides that the fair market value of a gift of a covenant, easement or servitude in respect of ecologically sensitive land will not be considered to be less than the decrease in value of the subject land that resulted from the making of the gift. The amendments clarify that an individual donor may nevertheless report a reduced amount of proceeds of disposition of such a gift, where the value of the gift for the purpose of calculating the charitable donations tax credit is reduced accordingly. This amendment applies in respect of gifts made after February 27, 1995.

(7) Gifts of art — Except where subsection (7.1) applies, where at any time, whether by the individual's will or otherwise, an individual makes a gift of a work of art that was created by the individual and that is property in the individual's inventory to a donee described in the definition "total charitable gifts" or "total Crown gifts" in subsection (1) and at that time the fair market value of the work of art exceeds its cost amount to the individual, such amount, not greater than that fair market value and not less than that cost amount, as is designated in the individual's return of income under section 150 for the year in which the gift is made shall, if the making of the gift is proven by filing with the Minister a receipt containing prescribed information, be deemed to be the individual's proceeds of disposition of the work of art and, for the purposes of subsection (1), the fair market value of the gift made by the individual.

Proposed Amendment — 118.1(7)

(7) Gifts of art — Except where subsection (7.1) applies, where at any time, whether by the individual's will or otherwise, an individual makes a gift described in the definition "total charitable gifts" or "total Crown gifts" in subsection (1) of a work of art that was

(a) created by the individual and that is property in the individual's inventory, or

(b) acquired under circumstances where subsection 70(3) applied, and at that time the fair market value of the work of art exceeds its cost amount to the individual, the following rules apply:

(c) where the gift is made as a consequence of the death of the individual, the gift is deemed to have been made immediately before the death, and

(d) the amount, not greater than that fair market value at the time the gift is made and not less than the cost amount of the property to the individual, that is designated in the individual's return of income under section 150 for the year in which the gift is made is, if the making of the gift is proven by filing with the Minister a receipt containing prescribed information, deemed to be the individual's proceeds of disposition of the work of art and, for the purposes of subsection (1), the fair market value of the gift made by the individual.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 63(3), will amend subsec. 118.1(7) to read as above, applicable to 2000 et seq., and where a taxpayer or a taxpayer's legal representative so notifies the Minister of National Revenue in writing before 2002 of the intention of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's legal representative that this amendment apply in respect of a gift made after 1996 and before 2000, this amendment applies to the taxation year in which the gift was made and, where para. 118.1(7)(d) applies, the amount designated in the notice in respect of the gift is deemed to have been validly designated for the purposes of that paragraph in the taxpayer's return of income for the year in which the gift was made.

Technical Notes: Subsection 118.1(7) of the Act provides that, if an artist donates artwork created by the artist and held in inventory, the artist may designate a value between the cost amount and the fair market value of the artwork to be treated both as the proceeds of disposition for the purpose of calculating the individual's income and the amount of the gift for the purpose of calculating the tax credit allowed for charitable donations under subsection 118.1(3). Such an amount may also be designated by the legal representative of a deceased artist, where the artwork is donated according to the late individual's will.

If the artwork is cultural property, as described in subsection 118.1(1) of the Act, subsection 118.1(7.1) of the Act applies instead of subsection (7) of the Act. Under subsection 118.1(7.1), the individual is also treated as having received proceeds of disposition equal to the cost amount to the individual of the work of art for the purpose of calculating the individual's income, but the fair market value of the artwork is not affected. This means that the artist is entitled to a credit based on the value of the donation, but that the deceased artist recognizes neither a profit nor a loss on the disposition of the work of art in computing income from the artist's business for income tax purposes.

Subsections (7) and (7.1) of the Act are amended to provide that, where artwork is donated as a result of the death of the individual, the gift is deemed to have been made by the individual immediately before the individual's death. These amendments clarify that the proceeds of disposition calculated under these subsections are relevant for the purpose of calculating the income of the late individual in the year of death.

Subsections 118.1(7) and (7.1) of the Act are also amended to apply to artwork that has been donated by an individual who acquired the artwork in circumstances where subsection 70(3) of the Act applied (i.e. as a "right or thing").

Upon the death of an individual, subsections 69(1.1) and 70(3) of the Act provide (if applicable) a rollover of "rights or things" of the late individual to beneficiaries or other persons beneficially interested in the estate or trust of the late individual. That is, if artwork of a late individual is a "right or thing," income from the ultimate disposition of the artwork will be attributed to the beneficiary. (Note, however, that subsection 70(3) of the Act does not apply where the late individual's legal representative has validly filed a "rights or things" return or where the time for filing such a return has expired before the transfer of the artwork to the beneficiary).

New subsections 118.1(7) and (7.1) of the Act apply to such an individual beneficiary if that beneficiary donates the artwork to the same effect as if the artwork had been donated by the deceased person.

Letter from Department of Finance, April 17, 1998: Dear [xxx]

Thank you for your letter dated February 2, 1998 concerning the income tax treatment of donations to museums by artists' heirs.

I will be recommending the inclusion of the necessary amendments to the Income Tax Act to cause donations of art by artists' heirs to be treated the same way for tax purposes as donations made by artists and collectors. This amendment should be contained in the next technical bill relating to income tax matters. As per my previous correspondence, I will recommend that the amendment apply to the 1997 and subsequent taxation years.

Should you have any concerns please contact Alexandra Maclean of this Department at 992-5636.

Sincerely,

The Honourable Paul Martin, P.C., M.P.

History: Subsec. 118.1(11) added by 1995, c. 38, s. 3, in force July 12, 1996.

(12) Ecological gifts — For the purposes of section 207.31 and the definition "total ecological gifts" in subsection (1), the fair market value of a gift of a servitude, a covenant or an easement to which land is subject is deemed to be the greater of its fair market value otherwise determined and the amount by which the fair market value of the land is reduced as a result of the making of the gift.

Proposed Amendment — 118.1(12)

(12) Ecological gifts — For the purpose of applying subparagraph 69(1)(b)(ii), subsection 70(5), section 207.31 and this section in respect of a gift described in the definition "total ecological gifts" in subsection (1) that is made by a taxpayer and that is a servitude, covenant or easement to which land is subject, the greater of

(a) the fair market value otherwise determined of the gift, and

(b) the amount by which the fair market value of the land is reduced as a result of the making of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value (or, for the purpose of subsection (6), the fair market value otherwise determined) of the gift at the time the gift was made and, subject to subsection (6), to be the taxpayer's proceeds of disposition of the gift.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 63(4), will amend subsec. 118.1(12) to read as above, applicable in respect of gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Technical Notes: Subsection 118.1(12) of the Act provides that the fair market value of a gift of a covenant, easement or servitude in respect of ecologically sensitive land will not be considered to be less than the decrease in value of the subject land that resulted from the making of the gift.

Subsection 118.1(12) of the Act is amended to clarify that such amount will also be, subject to the designation of an amount under subsection 118.1(6), the donor's proceeds of disposition for the purposes of calculating income and capital gains. This amendment applies in respect of gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Department of Finance news release, June 3, 1999: Clarifying Changes to Tax Rules Announced for Donations of Ecologically Sensitive Land

Finance Minister Paul Martin today announced technical changes to the income tax rules applying to the donation of a servitude, covenant or easement in respect of ecologically sensitive land. The changes clarify the manner in which capital gains and losses on the disposition of the property that is the subject of a charitable gift are to be calculated.

The tax credit or deduction allowed to a donor upon making such a gift should be based on the gift's fair market value. However, the fair market value is often difficult to determine since there is no established market for easements, covenants or servitudes. Accordingly, a 1997 budget measure provided that the fair market value of such a gift be considered to be no less than the decrease in the fair market value of the related land as a result of the gift. The 1997 amendment did not, however, explicitly set out how to determine the cost of the related land that is allocable to the gift for the purpose of calculating any gain or loss that may arise on its disposition. The amendments announced today clarify how this allocation is to be made.

These amendments also clarify that the rules that apply in determining the value of an ecological gift would also apply in determining the donor's proceeds of disposition for calculating a capital gain or loss. Further, where there would be a capital gain, these amendments allow the donor to report a lesser gain and claim a correspondingly lesser charitable donations tax credit or deduction.

"Protection of Canada's environmental heritage is a responsibility for all Canadians," Minister Martin said. "Through the provision of tax incentives, the Government of Canada is encouraging private landowners to preserve this heritage on a voluntary basis."

Attached are the draft amendments to the Income Tax Act and a background note providing more details about how the rules apply. These amendments are proposed to apply to gifts made after February 27, 1995, the date on which these measures first became effective.

BACKGROUNDER

The 1995 budget announced enhanced incentives for the donation of ecologically sensitive land to the Government of Canada, a provincial government, a Canadian municipality or an approved registered charity established for the purpose of protecting Canada's environmental heritage. Donations from individuals are eligible for the charitable donations tax credit, while those from corporations are eligible for a deduction from income. Besides transfers of title, landowners are able to donate covenants, easements and servitudes established under common law, the Civil Code in Quebec, or particular provincial or territorial legislation allowing for their establishment.

Normally, the value of a donated property is determined to be the price that a purchaser would pay for the property on the open market. As there is no established market for covenants, easements and servitudes, the fair market value of such restrictions on land use is difficult to determine. To provide greater certainty in making these valuations, the 1997 budget introduced a measure to deem the value of these gifts to be not less than the resulting decrease in the value of the land. That measure was implemented with application to gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Like other capital property, the value of a covenant, easement or servitude is also relevant in calculating the capital gain or loss that may arise on disposition. To provide taxpayers greater certainty in making this calculation, the amendments announced today will ensure that:

- a reasonable portion of the adjusted cost base of the land is to be allocated to the donated covenant, easement or servitude; and
- the proceeds of disposition for capital gains purposes are equal to the amount deemed for the purpose of the claim of a charitable donation deduction or credit.

For this purpose, an allocation of the adjusted cost base of the land to the gift, in proportion to the percentage decrease in the value of the land as a result of the donation, will be accepted as a reasonable allocation.

A provision is also added to provide a donor with the option of reporting a reduced amount of capital gain, provided that the value of the gift for the purposes of the charitable donations tax credit or deduction is reduced accordingly.

(a) except for the purpose of applying subsection (6) to determine the individual's proceeds of disposition of the security, the gift is deemed not to have been made;

(b) if the security ceases to be a non-qualifying security of the individual at a subsequent time that is within 60 months after the particular time and the donee has not disposed of the security at or before the subsequent time, the individual is deemed to have made a gift to the donee of property at the subsequent time and the fair market value of that gift is deemed to be the lesser of the fair market value of the security at the subsequent time and the amount of the gift made at the particular time that would, but for this subsection, have been included in the individual's total charitable gifts or total Crown gifts for a taxation year;

(c) if the security is disposed of by the donee within 60 months after the particular time and paragraph (b) does not apply to the security, the individual is deemed to have made a gift to the donee of property at the time of the disposition and the fair market value of that gift is deemed to be the lesser of the fair market value of any consideration (other than a non-qualifying security of the individual or a property that would be a non-qualifying security of the individual if the individual were alive at that time) received by the donee for the disposition and the amount of the gift made at the particular time that would, but for this subsection, have been included in the individual's total charitable gifts or total Crown gifts for a taxation year; and

(d) a designation under subsection (6) or 110.1(3) in respect of the gift made at the particular time may be made in the individual's return of income for the year

(17) That, for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years, there be added to the list of expenses eligible for the medical expense tax credit the portion of reasonable expenses, relating to the construction of the principal place of residence of an individual who lacks normal physical development or has a severe and prolonged mobility impairment, that can reasonably be considered to be incremental costs incurred to enable the individual to gain access to, or to be mobile or functional within, the individual's principal place of residence.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: The Medical Expense Tax Credit and New Homes

The medical expense tax credit (METC) provides tax recognition for above-average medical expenses incurred by individuals. For 2000, the METC reduces the federal tax of a claimant by 17 per cent of qualifying unreimbursed medical expenses in excess of the lesser of $1,637 and 3 per cent of net income.

Currently, an individual who lacks normal physical development or has a severe and prolonged mobility impairment may be eligible for the METC in respect of renovation costs incurred to enable the individual to gain access to or to be mobile or functional within the home. The budget proposes to extend tax assistance to such individuals who incur reasonable expenses relating to the construction of a principal place of residence where the expenses can reasonably be considered to be incremental costs incurred to enable the individual to gain access to or to be mobile or functional within the home.

(i) the amount paid for the acquisition of the van

exceeds

(ii) the portion, if any, of the amount referred to in subparagraph (i) that is included because of paragraph (m) in computing the individual's deduction under this section for any taxation year;

(A) a medical doctor or a psychologist, in the case of mental impairment, and

(B) a medical doctor or an occupational therapist, in the case of a physical impairment,

(q) [health plan premiums] — as a premium, contribution or other consideration under a private health services plan in respect of one or more of the individual, the individual's spouse and any member of the individual's household with whom the individual is connected by blood relationship, marriage or adoption,

Proposed Addition — Qualifying Medical Expenses

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 16, 1999: Medical expense tax credit (METC) — persons with disabilities

The government is committed to continue helping Canadians with disabilities by building on the significant level of tax assistance that is already available. In the last two years, a number of tax relief measures were introduced to better recognize disability-related costs. These included the introduction of a tax credit for caregivers, a refundable tax credit for low-income earners with high medical expenses, and the addition of new expenses eligible for relief under the METC. These measures have provided significant additional tax assistance for persons with disabilities.

The METC recognizes the burden of above-average medical expenses by providing tax relief for eligible medical expenses. For 1999, the METC reduces the federal tax of a claimant by 17 per cent of qualifying unreimbursed medical expenses in excess of the lesser of 3 per cent of net income and $1,614.

The budget proposes to further improve tax assistance for the care and education of persons with disabilities by extending the METC to expenses in respect of the remuneration for:

- the care and supervision of persons with severe and prolonged disabilities living in a group home;
- therapy for persons with severe and prolonged disabilities; and
- tutoring for persons with learning disabilities (or other mental impairments).

The budget also proposes to expand the list of eligible equipment for persons with disabilities.

These measures will apply to the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

Expanding the list of eligible equipment for persons with disabilities

The Income Tax Regulations contain a list of medical devices and equipment eligible for tax relief under the METC. This list will be expanded to include talking textbooks prescribed by a medical practitioner in connection with an individual's enrolment at an educational institution in Canada, where the individual has a perceptual disability.

Proposed Amendment — 118.3(2)

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: (15) That, for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years,

(a) a $2,941 supplement (indexed after 2000) be added in computing the disability amount that may be claimed in respect of a child who has not attained 18 years of age before the end of the year, and

(b) the amount of the supplement be reduced by the amount by which the total of child care and attendant care expenses claimed for the year in respect of the child exceeds $2,000 (indexed after 2000).

(16) That, for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years, the list of relatives to whom the unused portion of an individual's disability tax credit may be transferred in certain circumstances for use against Canadian tax payable be expanded to include a person who is a brother, sister, aunt, uncle, nephew or niece of the individual or of the individual's spouse.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Assistance for Caregivers of Children with Severe Disabilities

The infirm dependant credit and caregiver credit provide tax assistance for the care of infirm dependent adult relatives and seniors. This budget provides additional tax assistance for families caring for children with severe disabilities through a supplement for children eligible for the DTC. The supplement amount will be $2,941 and will reduce federal taxes payable by up to $500. The $500 supplement credit will be in addition to the $730 federal tax value of the disability tax credit as of January 1, 2000. The $2,941 supplement amount will be reduced by the amount of child care expenses and attendant care expenses claimed, in respect of the child, exceeding $2,000. This reduction will target tax assistance to families providing unpaid care for children with severe disabilities. The supplement is reduced to zero when child care and attendant care expenses reach $4,941. It is estimated that this supplement will benefit about 40,000 children eligible for the DTC at a cost of $20 million annually.

Enhancing the Disability Tax Credit

. . . . .

The budget also proposes to expand the list of relatives to whom the DTC can be transferred, making it consistent with the medical expense tax credit rules. As a consequence, unused amounts of the DTC may be transferred to individuals supporting a brother, sister, aunt, uncle, niece or nephew, as well as to individuals supporting a spouse, child, grandchild, parent or grandparent.

Proposed Amendment — 118.4(1)(b)

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Disability Tax Credit

(14) That, for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years, the disability tax credit be extended to an individual

(a) who has, and has been certified to have, a severe and prolonged mental or physical impairment, and

(b) who has been certified by a medical doctor to be a person whose ability to perform a basic activity of daily living would all or substantially all of the time be markedly restricted but for therapy (other than therapy that can reasonably be expected to be of benefit to persons who are not so impaired) that is

(i) essential to sustain a vital function of the individual, and

(ii) required to be administered at least three times each week for a total period averaging not less than 14 hours a week.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Enhancing the Disability Tax Credit

The disability tax credit (DTC) recognizes the effect of a severe and prolonged disability on an individual's ability to pay tax. It provides tax relief to over 500,000 claimants at an annual cost of $280 million.

To be eligible for the DTC, an individual must have a severe and prolonged disability that markedly restricts the ability to perform a basic activity of daily living.

The basic activities of daily living include perceiving, thinking and remembering, feeding and dressing oneself, speaking, hearing, eliminating and walking. An individual's ability to perform these activities is markedly restricted only where, even with the use of appropriate devices, medication and therapy, the individual is blind, or unable to perform the activity.

Consistent with representations made by organizations representing persons with disabilities, the budget proposes extending eligibility for the DTC to individuals who must undergo therapy several times each week totalling at least 14 hours per week in order to sustain their vital functions. In such cases, the severity of the disability is evident in the requirement for extensive therapy that is essential to the individual's survival. Examples of persons who may be eligible for the DTC under the proposed change include individuals with severe kidney disease requiring dialysis in order to prevent renal failure, and individuals with severe cystic fibrosis requiring clapping therapy in order to breathe. It is estimated that this change will increase the number of persons eligible for the DTC by about 18,000, at a cost of $13 million annually.

(c) a basic activity of daily living in relation to an individual means

(i) perceiving, thinking and remembering,

(ii) feeding and dressing oneself,

Selected Cases [subpara. 118.4(1)(c)(ii)]: Mercier v. R., [1998] 2 C.T.C. 2610 (TCC) ("And" should be read as "or").

(iii) speaking so as to be understood, in a quiet setting, by another person familiar with the individual,

(iv) hearing so as to understand, in a quiet setting, another person familiar with the individual,

(v) eliminating (bowel or bladder functions), or

(vi) walking; and

(d) for greater certainty, no other activity, including working, housekeeping or a social or recreational activity, shall be considered as a basic activity of daily living.

118.4 (1) For the purposes of sections 63, 118.2 and 118.3,

(a) a person shall be considered to have a severe and prolonged impairment only if by reason thereof the person is markedly restricted in the person's activities of daily living and the impairment has lasted or can reasonably be expected to last for a continuous period of at least 12 months; and

118.6 (1) For the purposes of this section

II (1991, c. 49), subsec. 93(2), to substitute "described in the definition "designated educational institution" (other than an institution described in subparagraph (a)(ii) thereof) "for "described in subparagraph (a)(i) of the definition "designated educational institution" ", applicable to 1991 et seq.

(2) Education credit — There may be deducted in computing an individual's tax payable under this Part for a taxation year the amount determined by the formula

where

A is the appropriate percentage for the year; and

B is the total of the products obtained when

(a) $200 is multiplied by the number of months in the year during which the individual is enrolled in a qualifying educational program as a full-time student at a designated educational institution, and

(b) $60 is multiplied by the number of months in the year (other than months described in paragraph (a)), each of which is a month during which the individual is enrolled at a designated educational institution in a specified educational program that provides that each student in the program spend not less than 12 hours in the month on courses in the program, if the enrolment is proved by filing with the Minister a certificate in prescribed form issued by the designated educational institution and containing prescribed information and, in respect of a designated educational institution described in subparagraph (a)(ii) of the definition "designated educational institution" in subsection (1), the individual is enrolled in the program to obtain skills for, or improve the individual's skills in, an occupation.

Proposed Amendment — 118.6(2)B

if the enrolment is proven by filing with the Minister a certificate in prescribed form issued by the designated educational institution and containing prescribed information and, in respect of a designated educational institution described in subparagraph (a)(ii) of the definition "designated educational institution" in subsection (1), the individual has attained the age of 16 years before the end of the year and is enrolled in the program to obtain skills for, or improve the individual's skills in, an occupation.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 64, will amend the closing words of the description of B in subsec. 118.6(2) to read as above, applicable to 1999 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 118.6 of the Act provides a tax credit computed by reference to the number of months in a calendar year in which a student is enrolled in a qualified educational program at a designated educational institution. The expressions "qualified educational program" and "designated educational institution" are defined in subsection 118.6(1). Essentially, the education tax credit is granted to students enrolled in post-secondary and vocational job-training courses which qualify for the purposes of the tuition fee tax credit. In the case of vocational schools, fees paid on behalf of students who are under 16 years of age do not qualify for the tuition fee tax credit. The amendment clarifies that a similar restriction applies for the purposes of the education tax credit.

Related Provisions: 118.6(3) — Disabled individuals may be enrolled part-time; 118.61(2) — Carryforward of unused credits; 118.8 — Transfer of unused credits to spouse; 118.9 — Transfers to supporting person; 118.91 — Individual resident in Canada for part of the year; 118.92 — Ordering of credits; 118.93 — Credits in separate returns; 118.94 — Computing tax payable by a non-resident individual; 118.95(a) — Application in year individual becomes bankrupt; 146.02 — LLP (loan from RRSP to fund education).

History: Subsec. 118.6(2) amended by 1999, c. 22, subsec. 34(3), applicable to 1998 et seq. The subsec. formerly read:

(2) For the purpose of computing the tax payable under this Part by an individual for a taxation year, there may be deducted an amount determined by the formula

where

A is the appropriate percentage for the year, and

B is the number of months in the year during which the individual is enrolled in a qualifying educational program as a full-time student at a designated educational institution, if the enrolment is proven by filing with the Minister a certificate in prescribed form issued by the designated educational institution and containing prescribed information and, in respect of a designated educational institution described in subparagraph (a)(ii) of the definition "designated educational institution" in subsection (1), the student is enrolled in the program to obtain skills for, or improve the student's skills in, an occupation.

The formula in subsec. 118.6(2) amended by 1998, c. 19, s. 27, applicable to 1997 et seq. except that, for the 1997 taxation year, the reference to "$200" shall be read as a reference to "$150". It formerly read:

$$A \times $100^{20} \times B$$

The formula in subsec. 118.6(2) amended by 1997, c. 25, s. 28, applicable to 1996 et seq. It formerly read:

$$A \times $80^{20} \times B$$

The formula in subsec. 118.6(2) amended by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 57(1), to substitute "$80" for "$60", applicable to 1992 et seq.

The description of B in subsec. 118.6(2) substituted by 1994, c. 7, Sch. II (1991, c. 49), subsec. 93(3), applicable to 1991 et seq. That description formerly read:

(a) an amount may be deducted under section 118.3 in respect of the individual for the year; or

(b) the individual has in the year a mental or physical impairment the effects of which on the individual have been certified in writing, to be such that the individual cannot reasonably be expected to be enrolled as a full-time student while so impaired, by a medical doctor or, where the impairment is

(b) after February 24, 1998, in any other case.

The subsec. formerly read:

(3) Application of subsec. (2) to disabled individuals — In calculating the amount deductible under subsection (2) in computing the tax payable under this Part for a taxation year by an individual

(a) in respect of whom an amount may be deducted under section 118.3 for the year, or

(b) who has in the year a mental or physical impairment, if a medical doctor or, where the impairment is an impairment of sight, a medical doctor or an optometrist, has certified in writing that the effects of the impairment on the individual are such that the individual cannot reasonably be expected to be enrolled as a full-time student while so impaired, the reference in that subsection to "full-time student" shall be read as "student".

The amendments to the description of C in subsection 118.6(1) and to paragraph 118.61(2)(b) make the calculation of the student's unused tuition and education tax credits compatible with the ordering provided under section 118.92 for the claiming of non-refundable credits. As provided under that section, the tuition fee and education tax credits, as well as the carryforward of the unused portion of those credits, must be claimed before any part of those credits can be transferred to a spouse or supporting individual and before claiming any donation or dividend tax credit.

(g) where paragraph (f) does not apply, deduct from the amount, if any, determined under paragraph (e) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (f)(ii)

exceeds

(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (f)(i), and

(h) deduct from the amount resulting from the application of paragraph (f) or (g), as the case may be, the total of the taxes payable under this Part for the preceding years computed without reference to section 120.2, and the remainder, if any, obtained under paragraph (h) is the tax payable under this Part for the year of averaging and no further deduction may be made therefrom under any other provision of this Part except subsection 127(5).

119. Former resident — credit for tax paid — If at any particular time an individual was deemed by subsection 128.1(4) to have disposed of a capital property that was a taxable Canadian property of the individual throughout the period that began at the particular time and that ends at the first time, after the particular time, at which the individual disposes of the property, there may be deducted in computing the individual's tax payable under this Part for the taxation year that includes the particular time the lesser of

(a) that proportion of the individual's tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part (within the meaning assigned by paragraph (a) of the definition "tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part" in subsection 126(7)) that

(i) the individual's taxable capital gain from the disposition of the property at the particular time

(ii) the amount determined under paragraph 114(a) in respect of the individual for the year, and

(b) that proportion of the individual's tax payable under Part XIII in respect of dividends received during the period by the individual in respect of the property and amounts deemed under Part XIII to have been paid during the period to the individual as dividends from corporations resident in Canada, to the extent that the amounts can reasonably be considered to relate to the property, that

(i) the amount by which the individual's loss from the disposition of the property at the end of the period is reduced by subsection 40(3.7)

is of

(ii) the total amount of those dividends.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 66, will repeal s. 119 applicable to 1995 et seq., and add the above s. 119, applicable to dispositions after December 23, 1998 by individuals who cease to be resident in Canada after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Existing section 119 of the Act provides for a five-year block averaging for farmers and fishermen. Since the section is no longer active, it is repealed effective for the 1995 and subsequent taxation years.

New section 119 of the Act, which is unrelated to repealed section 119, provides a special tax credit in certain cases where the "stop-loss" rule in new subsection 40(3.7) of the Act applies to an individual who ceased to be resident in Canada.

Under amended subsection 128.1(4) of the Act, individuals who emigrate from Canada are treated as having disposed of most properties, for proceeds equal to the fair market value of the properties. Such an individual may therefore be treated as having realized an accrued gain immediately before leaving Canada, and will be subject to tax on the gain. If the individual subsequently receives dividends in respect of the same property, a loss realized on a later disposition of the property may be reduced by new subsection 40(3.7) of the Act, and thus may not be available to offset the gain that resulted from the subsection 128.1(4) deemed disposition. Part or all of the tax liability arising from the gain would thus remain payable. However, the individual may also have paid tax on those post-departure dividends, under Part XIII of the Act.

New section 119 addresses this possible overlap between the tax resulting from the subsection 128.1(4) deemed disposition of a capital property and the Part XIII tax on dividends that reduce the taxpayer's loss on the property. In general terms, the rule allows a tax credit equal to the tax on those dividends, up to the amount of the tax on the capital gain that arose on emigration from Canada.

More specifically, section 119 allows the individual to deduct, in computing tax otherwise payable under Part I of the Act for the taxation year in which subsection 128.1(4) treated the individual as having disposed of the property, the lesser of two amounts. The first amount, described in paragraph 119(a), is in effect the amount of tax attributable to the gain on the property. This amount is computed as the proportion of the individual's Part I tax for that year that the taxable capital gain on the particular property is of the individual's total income for the year, as determined under new paragraph 114(a) of the Act.

The second amount, set out in paragraph 119(b), is the Part XIII withholding tax paid (or deemed to have been paid) by the individual on dividends that, under new subsection 40(3.7), have reduced the individual's loss from the disposition of the property. This amount is computed as the proportion of the individual's Part XIII tax in respect of dividends in respect of the property that the subsection 40(3.7) loss reduction is of the total amount of those dividends.

A consequential amendment to subsection 152(6) of the Act ensures that any necessary assessments of tax will be made in order to take account of the effect of new section 119.

120. (1) Income not earned in a province — There shall be added to the tax otherwise payable under this Part by an individual for a taxation year an amount that bears the same relation to 52% of the tax otherwise payable under this Part by the individual for the year that

(a) the individual's income for the year, other than the individual's income earned in the year in a province, bears to

(b) the individual's income for the year.

Proposed Amendment — Reduction in non-resident's tax rate

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Income Not Earned in a Province

(12) That, for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years, the surtax applicable to an individual's income not earned in a province be reduced to 48 per cent from 52 per cent.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Reduction in Federal Surtax for Non-Residents

Individuals who have income which is considered to have been earned in Canada, but which is not considered to be earned in a province, pay a special federal surtax in addition to their regular federal tax. Individuals with such income include

- deemed residents, such as members of the Armed Forces who reside outside of Canada and therefore have no province of residence;
- Canadian residents with income from a permanent establishment in a foreign country; and
- non-residents who have business or employment income taxable in Canada.

The federal surtax for non-residents, which is currently 52 per cent of basic federal tax, ensures that deemed residents and others with income not earned in a province face a total income tax burden roughly comparable to that of Canadian residents. The surtax, which was introduced in 1972, is calculated to approximate provincial taxes. The surtax percentage has been adjusted on several occasions since 1972 to reflect changes in average provincial tax rates.

In light of recent changes in provincial tax rates, the budget proposes to reduce the federal surtax on income not earned in a province from 52 per cent of basic federal tax to 48 per cent.

This measure will apply for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 67(1), will repeal subsec. 120(2.1), applicable to 1996 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 120(2.1) of the Act provides a special rule for computing the amount that is considered, under subsection 120(2), to have been paid on behalf of an individual's tax for a taxation year. This special rule applies where existing section 119 of the Act applies to the individual for the year. Existing section 119 is no longer active, and is replaced with a new, unrelated rule. Subsection 120(2.1) is therefore repealed, for the 1996 and subsequent taxation years.

Pre-RSC History: Subsec. 120(2.1) added by 1980-81-82-83, c. 48, subsec. 66(1), applicable to 1980 et seq.

(2.2) Amount deemed paid [First Nations tax] — An individual is deemed to have paid on the last day of a taxation year, on account of the individual's tax under this Part for the year, an amount equal to the individual's income tax payable for the year to an Aboriginal government pursuant to a law of that government made in accordance with a tax sharing agreement between that government and the Government of Canada.

Related Provisions: 81(1)(a) — Deduction for amounts exempted under Indian Act; 152(1)(b) — Determination of amount on assessment; 152(4.2)(d) — Redetermination at taxpayer's request; 156.1(1)"net tax owing"(b)B, E, F, 156.1(1.3) — First Nations tax counted for instalment purposes.

History: Subsec. 120(2.2) added by 2000, c. 19, subsec. 27(1), applicable to 1999 et seq.

(3) Definition of "the individual's income for the year" — For the purpose of this section, "the individual's income for the year" means

(a) in the case of an individual to whom section 114 applies who was resident in Canada during part of the year and during some other part of the year was not resident in Canada, the amount that would be determined under that section to be the individual's taxable income for the year if that section were read without reference to the words following paragraph 114(b);

(b) in the case of an individual to whom section 115 applies who was not resident in Canada at any time in the taxation year, the amount that would be determined under Division D to be the individual's taxable income for the year if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to the words following paragraph 115(1)(c); and

Proposed Amendment — 120(3)(a), (b)

(3) Definition of "individual's income for the year" — In subsections (1) and (2), an "individual's income for the year" means

(a) if section 114 applies to the individual in respect of the year, the amount determined under paragraph 114(a) in respect of the individual for the year; and

(b) if the individual was non-resident throughout the year, the individual's taxable income earned in Canada for the year determined without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f).

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 67(2), will amend subsec. 120(3) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq. (subject to further amendments above and below).

Technical Notes: Section 120 of the Act sets out rules that integrate the federal and provincial income tax systems for individuals. Subsection 120(1) imposes an additional amount of federal tax on income that is not subject to provincial or territorial tax, while subsection 120(2) provides part of the tax abatement for income earned in Quebec (the rest is found in legislation concerning federal-provincial fiscal arrangements).

For the purposes of subsections 120(1) and (2) of the Act, subsection 120(3) defines the phrase "the individual's income for the year" where sections 114 or 115 of the Act — dealing with part-year residents and non-residents, respectively — apply in respect of the individual for the year. Subsection 120(3) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment makes no substantive change, but keeps the reference in step with the changes to section 114. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

(c) in the case of an individual who is a specified individual in relation to the year, the individual's income for the year computed without reference to paragraph 20(1)(ww).

(a)(ii)(A) of the definition "tax otherwise payable under this Part" in subsec. 120(4) to read as above, applicable to 1996 et seq. except that, in its application to taxation years that end before 2000, subsec. 120.1 (1) Forward averaging credit — There may be deducted from the amount that would, but for this section, be the tax otherwise payable under this Part (other than the tax payable with respect to a return of income referred to in subsection 110.4(5)) by an individual for a taxation year an amount equal to the product obtained when

(a) the amount specified in the individual's election for the year under subsection 110.4(2) and, where the individual's legal representative has filed on the individual's behalf an election under subsection (2) for the year, the individual's accumulated averaging amount at the end of the year is multiplied by

(b) the percentage referred to in paragraph 117(2)(c).

(2) Year of death — Where an individual dies in a taxation year before 1998 (and is resident in Canada at the time of death) and the individual's legal representative files with the individual's return of income (other than a return of income referred to in subsection 110.4(5)) for the year an election in prescribed form on or before the day on or before which the return is required to be filed, there shall be added to the amount that would, but for this section, be the individual's tax payable for the year under this Part with respect to the return of income an amount equal to the amount, if any, by which

(a) the total of the taxes that would have been payable by the individual under this Part for the three immediately preceding taxation years if the individual's taxable income otherwise determined for each of those years were increased by 1/3 of the individual's accumulated averaging amount at the end of the year in which the individual died and if this Part were read without reference to sections 119 to 127.3

(b) the total of the taxes that would have been payable by the individual under this Part for the three immediately preceding taxation years if this Part were read without reference to sections 119 to 127.3.

(3) Deduction and additions — Each amount deducted or added under subsection (1) or (2) in computing the tax payable under this Part by an individual for a taxation year shall, notwithstanding those subsections, be equal to the total of

(a) the amount that would, but for this subsection, be determined for the year under subsection (1) or (2), as the case may be, and

(b) an amount equal to that proportion of 52% of the amount referred to in paragraph (a) that

(i) the individual's income for the year, other than the individual's income earned in the year in a province,

is of

(ii) the individual's income for the year.

(4) Presumption — Where the amount deductible by an individual under subsection (1) exceeds the amount that would, but for that subsection, be the individual's tax otherwise payable under this Part for the year, the excess shall be deemed to be an amount paid by the individual, on the day the individual was required to file the election under subsection 110.4(2), on account of the individual's tax for the year under this Part.

(5) Reduction — Notwithstanding subsection (4), the amount of the excess referred to in that subsection shall be reduced by an amount equal to that proportion of 16.5% of the amount of the excess that

(7) Application — This section does not apply to an individual described in subsection (6) unless the individual's legal representatives have, on or before the day on or before which they were required to file the individual's return of income under this Part for the taxation year in which the individual died (or would have been required to file such a return had tax been payable by the individual under this Part for the year), filed a return of the individual's income for each of the three taxation years referred to in paragraph (2)(b) in the same form and containing the same information as the return that the individual, or legal representatives, would have been required to file under this Part if the individual had been resident in Canada throughout each of those three years and if tax had been payable by the individual under this Part for each of those three years.

(8) Amount required to be included — Where an amount is required by virtue of this section to be included in computing the individual's tax otherwise payable under this Part for a taxation year, the references in subsection 120(1) and section 121 of this Act and subsection 120(3.1) of the Income Tax Act, chapter 148 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, to "the tax otherwise payable under this Part" shall be read as references to "the amount that would, but for section 120.1, be the tax otherwise payable under this Part".

(b) a taxation year of an individual in respect of which the individual has made an election under section 119.

Proposed Amendment — 120.2(4)

(4) Where subsection (1) does not apply — Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of an individual's return of income filed under subsection 70(2), paragraph 104(23)(d) or 128(2)(f) or subsection 150(4).

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 68, will amend subsec. 120.2(4) to read as above, applicable to 1996 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 120.2 of the Act allows an individual to apply additional taxes, imposed for a given year under the section 127.5 minimum tax, against the individual's ordinary Part I tax liabilities for following years. Paragraph 120.2(4)(b) prevents such a carryforward in respect of any taxation year in which the taxpayer has elected under existing section 119 of the Act. Existing section 119 no longer applies, and is replaced with an unrelated new rule. Subsection 120.2(4) is therefore restructured to remove its reference to section 119. This amendment applies to the 1996 and subsequent taxation years.

History: The opening words of subsec. 120.2(1), subpara. 120.2(1)(b)(i) and para. 120.2(3)(b) amended by 2000, c. 19, subsecs. 29(1)–(3), applicable to 2000 et seq. The opening words, the subpara. and para. formerly read:

(1) There may be deducted from the amount that, but for this section and sections 120 and 120.1, would be the tax payable under this Part by an individual for a particular taxation year such amount as the individual may claim not exceeding the lesser of

. . . . .

(i) the amount that, but for this section, subsection 117(6), sections 120 and 120.1, would be the individual's tax payable under this Part for the particular year if the individual were not entitled to any deduction under any of sections 126, 127 and 127.2 to 127.4

. . . . .

(b) the amount that, but for subsection 117(6) and sections 120 and 120.1, would be the tax payable by the individual under this Part for the year if the individual were not entitled to any deduction under any of sections 126, 127 and 127.2 to 127.4, and

Para. 120.2(4)(a) amended by 1998, c. 19, s. 137, applicable to taxation years that begin after April 26, 1995. Para. 120.2(4)(a) formerly read:

(a) a return of income of an individual filed under subsection 70(2), paragraph 104(23)(d) or 128(2)(e) or subsection 150(4); or

(a) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the amount that would be the individual's tax payable under this Part for the eligible taxation year if the total of all amounts, each of which is the specified portion, in relation to the eligible taxation year, of a qualifying amount received by the individual before the end of the year of receipt, were added in computing the individual's taxable income for the eligible taxation year

(ii) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount, in respect of a qualifying amount received by the individual before the year of receipt, that was included because of this paragraph in computing the individual's notional tax payable under this Part for the eligible taxation year, and

(b) where the eligible taxation year ended before the taxation year preceding the year of receipt, an amount equal to the amount that would be calculated as interest payable on the amount determined under paragraph (a) if it were so calculated

Pre-RSC History: Subsec. 122(1) amended to substitute "29%" for "34%" and subsec. (1.1) added, by 1988, c. 55, s. 96, applicable to 1988 et seq.

Subsec. 122(1) substituted by 1985, c. 45, subsec. 66(1), applicable to 1985 et seq. Subsec. 122(1) formerly read:

> 122. (1) Tax payable by inter vivos trust — Notwithstanding section 117, the amount determined under that section to be the tax payable under this Part by an inter vivos trust other than a mutual fund trust upon its amount taxable for a taxation year is the greater of
> (b) the amount otherwise determined thereunder to be its tax payable under this Part upon its amount taxable for the year.

Para. 122(1)(a) substituted by 1980-81-82-83, c. 140, subsec. 82(1), applicable to the 1982 and subsequent taxation years, to substitute "34%" for "35%".

(2) Where subsec. (1) does not apply — Subsection (1) is not applicable for a taxation year of an inter vivos trust other than a mutual fund trust if the trust

(a) was established before June 18, 1971;

(b) was resident in Canada on June 18, 1971 and without interruption thereafter until the end of the year;

(c) did not carry on any active business in the year;

(d) has not received any property by way of gift since June 18, 1971; and

Proposed Addition — 122(2)(d.1)

(d.1) was not a trust to which a contribution, within the meaning assigned by section 94, was made after June 22, 2000; and

Application: The June 22, 2000 draft legislation, s. 18, will add para. 122(2)(d.1), applicable to taxation years that begin after 2000.

Technical Notes: Subsection 122(1) of the Act provides that, instead of graduated income tax rates, inter vivos trusts are generally subject to top marginal rates of income tax on their undistributed income. Subsection 122(2) permits graduated income tax rates for certain inter vivos trusts established before June 18, 1971. One of the conditions for an inter vivos trust continuing to qualify for graduated income tax rates is that it not receive any gifts after June 18, 1971.

Paragraph 122(2)(d.1) is introduced so that the graduated income tax rates cease to apply to a trust in the event that, after June 22, 2000, a "contribution" is made to the trust. The expression "contribution" is defined in new section 94.

This amendment applies to taxation years that begin after 2000.

(e) has not, after June 18, 1971, incurred

(i) any debt, or

(ii) any other obligation to pay an amount, to, or guaranteed by, any person with whom any beneficiary of the trust was not dealing at arm's length.

Proposed Addition — 122(2)(f)

(f) has not received any property after December 17, 1999, where

(ii) the property was received as a result of a transfer from another trust,

(ii) subsection (1) applied to a taxation year of the other trust that began before the property was so received, and

(iii) no change in the beneficial ownership of the property resulted from the transfer.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 69, will add para. 122(2)(f), applicable to 1999 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 122(1) provides that inter vivos trusts are generally subject to income tax at top marginal income tax rates. Subsection 122(2) of the Act permits certain pre-1972 inter vivos trusts access to graduated income tax rates.

Subsection 122(2) is amended to ensure that this special treatment does not apply to a trust in the event that property has been transferred after December 17, 1999 to the trust from another trust to which subsection 122(1) applies, if there was no change in the beneficial ownership of the property on its transfer.

This amendment applies to the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

Interpretation Bulletins: IT-381R3: Trusts — capital gains and losses and the flow-through of taxable capital gains to beneficiaries; IT-406R2: Tax payable by an inter vivos trust.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 70, will amend para. 122.3(1)(e) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 122.3 of the Act provides a tax credit to Canadian residents who are employed outside Canada by a specified employer for at least six months in connection with resource, construction, installation, agricultural or engineering contracts or for the purpose of obtaining those contracts. This credit — commonly known as the Overseas Employment Tax Credit (OETC) — effectively eliminates 80% of the Canadian tax arising on the first $100,000 of salary or wages earned from such foreign employment.

The OETC is determined by multiplying an employee's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction: the numerator of that fraction, determined under paragraphs 122.3(c) and (d) of the Act, generally consists of the lesser of $80,000 and 80% of the individual's overseas employment income for the year; the denominator, determined under paragraph 122.3(1)(e), is the individual's income for the year (or, where section 114 of the Act applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the individual is resident in Canada) reduced by certain deductions listed in subparagraph 122.3(1)(e)(iii).

Paragraph 122.3(1)(e) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment makes no substantive change, but keeps the reference in step with the changes to section 114. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

Proposed Amendment — Child Tax Benefit

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Canada Child Tax Benefit

(6) That the provisions of the Act relating to the base benefit and National Child Benefit supplement payable under the Canada Child Tax Benefit be modified in accordance with proposals described in the budget documents tabled by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on February 28, 2000.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Canada Child Tax Benefit

The Canada Child Tax Benefit (CCTB) is a key element of federal assistance to families. It is an income-tested benefit that has two components: the CCTB base benefit for low- and middle-income families and the National Child Benefit (NCB) supplement for low-income families.

The budget proposes a five-year plan to increase CCTB benefits by $2.5 billion annually by 2004, divided almost equally between low- and middle-income families. Together with increases announced in previous budgets, annual CCTB benefits will exceed $9 billion in 2004, of which low-income families will receive about $6 billion and middle-income families about $3 billion.

The Government's goal is to increase the maximum CCTB benefit for the first child to $2,400 by 2004 from $1,975, the currently scheduled amount for July 2000. The five-year plan will achieve this objective through a number of actions. First, the CCTB will be fully indexed. Second, both the base benefit and the NCB supplement will be increased beyond indexation. Third, the income thresholds at which the base benefit begins to be reduced and the NCB supplement is fully phased out will be increased. Fourth, the reduction rate for the base benefit will be lowered. Finally, the Children's Special Allowance, which provides benefits parallel to the CCTB to provincial agencies for children in care, will be increased.

The following changes, summarized in Tables A7.18 and A7.19, will be legislated for 2000 and 2001.

- Effective January 2000, CCTB parameters will be fully indexed based on the change in the CPI over the 12-month period ending on September 30 of the preceding year. As the CCTB program year begins in July, benefits will be adjusted in July 2000 and indexation benefits for the January to June 2000 period will be paid in the second half of the year. The higher level of benefits from July to December 2000 will be maintained until future indexation raises benefits further.

- In July 2000, the CCTB base benefit will increase by $70 per child, including indexation. The income thresholds at which the CCTB base benefit begins to be reduced and the NCB supplement is fully phased out will be set equal to the second tax bracket threshold. Consequently, these CCTB thresholds will be fully indexed, as the tax bracket threshold is, and will also follow any increases in the tax bracket threshold beyond indexation. The income threshold at which the NCB supplement begins to be reduced will also be indexed.

- By July 2001, the NCB supplement will be increased by $200 per child, including indexation, from the currently scheduled July 2000 levels of $955 for the first child, $755 for the second child and $680 for each subsequent child. The $200 benefit increase per child will enrich the NCB supplement by $500 million annually as of July 2001.

These changes will bring the maximum CCTB benefit for the first child to $2,056 in July 2000 and $2,265 in July 2001, well on the way to the five-year goal of $2,400. For the second child, the goal is to raise the maximum CCTB benefit to $2,200 in 2004. There are also additional benefits for children under the age of seven for whom no child care expense is claimed and for larger families. Maximum benefits for a two-child family with one child under the age of seven will reach $4,550 in July 2001 and $4,832 in July 2004.

Benefits for a typical two-child family with an income of $60,000 will increase from their pre-budget 2000 level of $733 to $967 in July 2001 and $1,541 in July 2004.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Corporate Tax Rate Reduction

Canada must ensure that its business income tax system is internationally competitive. This is important because business income tax rates have a significant impact on the level of business investment, employment, productivity, wages and incomes.

Canada's tax rates for small businesses and the manufacturing and processing (M&P) sector are already competitive. Also, the resource sector (crude oil, natural gas and mining) benefits from special deductions, such as the resource allowance when it exceeds provincial royalties, accelerated exploration and development expenses and fast write-offs for certain capital assets, all of which serve to reduce its effective tax rate.

However, higher overall corporate tax rates apply to other sectors of the economy. These sectors include the fast-growing service and knowledge-based firms that are likely to influence the pace of Canada's future economic and social development.

In addition, Canada imposes a capital tax on large corporations that is higher than in most G-7 countries.

Therefore, the Government intends to reduce, within five years, the federal corporate income tax rate from 28 to 21 per cent on business income not currently eligible for special tax treatment.

As an initial step in achieving this tax rate reduction, the budget proposes that, effective January 1, 2001, the federal corporate income tax rate on such income be reduced by 1 percentage point from 28 to 27 per cent. This rate change will be prorated for taxation years that include January 1, 2001.

The tax rate reduction will not apply to income that benefits from preferential corporate tax treatment such as small business and Canadian M&P income, investment income that benefits from refundable tax provisions or income from non-renewable natural resource activities. The reduction will also not apply to mutual fund corporations, mortgage investment corporations, and investment corporations (as defined in the Income Tax Act), which qualify for special tax provisions.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Faster Corporate Tax Rate Reduction for Small Business

Canada provides very favourable tax treatment for small business; this has a direct impact on their cost of doing business. For example, the lower tax rate on the first $200,000 of active business income alone provides the small business sector with more than $2.5 billion of tax assistance annually, allowing the retention of earnings for expansion. However, income earned by small businesses in excess of the $200,000 threshold is currently subject to the general corporate tax rate of 28 per cent or, for M&P income, to the 21-per-cent M&P rate.

Small businesses that are currently taxed at the 28-per-cent tax rate on their active business income in excess of the $200,000 small business limit will benefit from the proposed 1 percentage point reduction in the general tax rate next year and from the further reductions planned for the future. However, in order to provide additional and more immediate support for this sector, the budget proposes to advance the planned 7-percentage-point rate reduction for small business.

Specifically, the corporate tax rate on income between $200,000 and $300,000 earned by a Canadian-controlled private corporation (CCPC) from an active business carried on in Canada will be reduced to 21 per cent from 28 per cent, effective January 1, 2001 (prorated for taxation years that include that date).

Associated corporations will share the additional $100,000 of income eligible for the faster rate reduction in proportion to their share of the $200,000 small business limit. Income eligible for this lower rate will be reduced to the extent that a corporation has M&P income subject to the reduced M&P tax rate or income from resource activities.

Table A7.20 illustrates the impact of this faster access to the reduced 21-per-cent rate for a small business.

2 Taking into account the 10-per-cent provincial tax abatement.

3 Excluding resource income (such income will continue to be taxed at 28 per cent) and investment income.

4 The surtax remains at 4 per cent of the 28-per-cent corporate tax rate.

Federal Corporate Tax Rates

Table A7.21 presents the federal corporate tax rates on various types of income, before and after the proposed rate reduction.

Table A7.21

	Current rates	Proposed rates January 1, 2001	Target rates

On first $200,000 of CCPC's active business income{1}	12	12	12
On CCPC's active business income between $200,000 and $300,000{2}	28	21	21
On M & P income	21	21	21
On resource income{3}	21	21	21
On other income	28	27	21

Notes:

1 The $200,000 limit is reduced where taxable capital exceeds $10 million. Investment income earned by a CCPC will continue to be taxed at 28 per cent, plus the 62 1/4 3 per cent refundable tax on investment income tax. A portion of these taxes is refundable on the payment of dividends in order to provide integration of corporate and personal tax systems.

2 Reduced to the extent of M&P income subject to a rate reduction or income from resource activities.

3 After taking into account the 25-per-cent resource allowance deduction.

Related Provisions: 123.2(a) — Corporate surtax applies to total tax before claiming small business deduction; 125(2)–(5) — Restriction of deduction to $200,000 of active business income; 125(5.1) — Elimination of small business deduction for large corporations; 137(3), (4) — Credit unions — small business deduction.

Proposed Amendment — 125(7)"Canadian-controlled private corporation"

"Canadian-controlled private corporation" means a private corporation that is a Canadian corporation other than

(a) a corporation controlled, directly or indirectly in any manner whatever, by one or more non-resident persons, by one or more public corporations (other than a prescribed venture capital corporation), by one or more corporations described in paragraph (c), or by any combination of them,

(b) a corporation that would, if each share of the capital stock of a corporation that is owned by a non-resident person, by a public corporation (other than a prescribed venture capital corporation), or by a corporation described in paragraph (c) were owned by a particular person, be controlled by the particular person, or

(c) a corporation a class of the shares of the capital stock of which is listed on a prescribed stock exchange;

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 71, will amend the definition "Canadian-controlled private corporation" in subsec. 125(7) to read as above, applicable to taxation years that begin after 1999.

Technical Notes: Section 125 of the Act provides for a corporate tax reduction (called the "small business deduction") in respect of income of a Canadian-controlled private corporation (CCPC) from an active business carried on by it in Canada.

Subsection 125(7) of the Act defines "Canadian-controlled private corporation", among other terms. This definition applies not only to the small business deduction under section 125 of the Act but also, through its incorporation by reference into subsection 248(1) of the Act, to the Act as a whole.

Currently, a corporation is a CCPC if it is a private corporation and a Canadian corporation (both of which terms are defined in subsection 89(1) of the Act), and it is not controlled, directly or indirectly in any manner whatever by one or any combination of public corporations (other than prescribed venture capital corporations) or non-resident persons. A corporation controlled by a group of non-residents or public corporations is not considered a CCPC if each share held by non-residents or public corporations, when attributed to a notional person, results in the notional person having control of the underlying corporation. Nor is a corporation a CCPC if it lists its stock on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada (Regulation 3200) or outside of Canada (Regulation 3201).

This amendment ensures that a corporation controlled by a Canadian resident corporation that lists its shares on a prescribed stock exchange outside of Canada is not a CCPC. This mirrors the treatment of corporations controlled by a Canadian resident corporation that lists its shares on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada (public corporation). Under the current definition these corporations are not CCPCs.

Proposed Amendment — 125.1(2) — Production of steam for sale

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: M&Rate for Producing Steam for Sale

(42) That, for the purpose only of applying the manufacturing and processing profits tax rate reduction in subsection 125.1(2) of the Act for the 2000 and subsequent taxation years, the production of steam for sale be considered manufacturing or processing.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Manufacturing and Processing Tax Rate Reduction Extended to Income from Sale of Steam

Since 1973, the Government has provided a tax credit to reduce the rate of corporate tax applicable to Canadian manufacturing and processing profits. Before the February 16, 1999, budget, the definition of manufacturing and processing (M&P) had specifically excluded the production or processing of electrical energy or steam for sale. That budget proposed the extension of the M&P tax credit to corporations that produce, for sale, electrical energy or steam used in the generation of electricity.

This budget proposes to extend the M&P tax credit to corporations that produce, for sale, steam for uses other than the generation of electricity. This change will ensure that all producers of steam for sale will face the same income tax rate. Access to the credit will be phased in beginning January 1, 2000, with a three-percentage-point reduction. In each of the two subsequent years, there will be additional two-percentage-point reductions. The phase-in to M&P treatment will be completed in 2002. These proposed rate reductions will be prorated for taxation years that straddle calendar years.

(a) 0% multiplied by the number of days in the year that are before 1999,

(b) that proportion of "1%" that the number of days in the taxation year that are in the year is of the number of days in the taxation year,

(c) that proportion of "3%" that the number of days in the taxation year that are in the 2000 calendar year is of the number of days in the taxation year,

(d) that proportion of "5%" that the number of days in the taxation year that are in the 2001 calendar year is of the number of days in the taxation year,

(b) an amount in respect of a corporation's unused Part VI tax credit for a taxation year may be claimed under subsection (1) in computing its tax payable under this Part for another taxation year only to the extent that it exceeds the total of all amounts each of which is the amount claimed in respect of that unused Part VI tax credit in computing its tax payable under this Part for a taxation year preceding that other year.

Regulations: 8602 (prescribed proportion).

"unused Part I.3 tax credit" of a corporation for a taxation year means

(a) where the year ended before 1992, the amount, if any, by which its tax payable under Part I.3 for the year exceeds the amount deductible under subsection (1) in computing its tax payable under this Part for the year, and

(b) where the year ends after 1991, the amount, if any, by which the corporation's tax payable under Part I.3 for the year (determined without reference to subsection 181.1(4)) exceeds its Canadian surtax payable under this Part for the year.

Related Provisions: 87(2)(j.9) — Amalgamations; 88(1)(e.2) — Winding-up.

History: "Unused Part I.3 tax credit" in subsec. 125.3(4) amended by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 66(2), applicable for the purpose of computing the amount that may be deducted under subsec. 125.3(1) for taxation years ending after June 1989. The definition formerly read:

"unused Part I.3 tax credit" of a corporation for a taxation year means the amount, if any, by which the corporation's tax payable under Part I.3 for the year exceeds the amount deductible under subsection (1) in computing its tax payable under this Part for the year.

"Canadian surtax payable" of a corporation for a taxation year means that proportion of

(a) in the case of a corporation that is throughout the year not resident in Canada, the amount determined under section 123.2 in respect of the corporation for the year, and that the number of days in the year that are after June 1989 is of the number of days in the year;

The amendment ensures that the definition applies without reference to the new surtax credit provided under Part I.3 (see subsec. 181.1(4)). In other words, Part I.3 liability, for purposes of calculating the amount of any excess of that liability over Canadian surtax payable, is determined before accounting for the reduction of Part I.3 tax by the new surtax credit.

Canadian Film or Video Production Tax Credit

Proposed Amendment — Changes to Film/Video Production Credit

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Simplified Film Tax Incentives

The Canadian film and television production industry has achieved considerable expansion in recent years with the support of the federal and provincial governments. Federal support for Canada's film industry includes two tax credits in respect of qualifying labour expenditures:

- the Canadian Film or Video Production Tax Credit (CFVPTC, generally equal to 25 per cent of eligible labour expenses), for film or video productions certified by the Minister of Canadian Heritage as meeting specific Canadian ownership and artistic criteria [section 125.4 — ed.]; and
- the Film or Video Production Services Tax Credit (FVPSTC, generally equal to 11 per cent of eligible Canadian labour expenses), for other film or video productions produced in Canada [section 125.5 — ed.].

In some cases, the CFVPTC may be difficult for Canadian film producers to access, particularly where financing arrangements are complex. The Government therefore intends to review the rules respecting the CFVPTC, in consultation with industry associations, to develop criteria for a streamlined mechanism for delivering the CFVPTC incentive. The objective of these discussions is to design criteria that

- result in a simplified calculation for the CFVPTC, based more closely on Canadian labour content;
- reflect the original objectives of the existing eligibility requirements for film and video productions that were announced in the 1995 budget; and
- are revenue-neutral in terms of the level of support to be given by the Government.

Proposed Amendment — Administration of Film Production Credit

Revenue Canada news release, July 21, 1999: Minister Dhaliwal announces Revenue Canada initiatives for film industry in Canada

The Honourable Herb Dhaliwal, Minister of National Revenue and M.P. (Vancouver South-Burnaby), today announced a number of initiatives resulting from extensive consultations between Revenue Canada and representatives of the film production industry in Canada.

"I am pleased to announce a series of measures that will provide certainty for the film industry in Canada along with enhanced service for film studios, producers, and actors," Mr. Dhaliwal said. "These streamlined procedures will assist the industry in complying with Canada's tax laws and ensure that Canada receives its fair share of the total taxes paid by non-resident actors."

The Minister announced that Revenue Canada will establish a Film Services Unit (FSU) to handle all tax procedures involving the film and television production industry in Canada, including the determination of taxes for non-resident actors and the administration of federal tax credits for non-resident and Canadian film productions.

The Minister said Revenue Canada already has a number of industry-specific groups similar to the new FSU, including a recently-established unit to administer tax incentives for the Scientific Research and Experimental Development program.

"The film industry in Canada is dynamic and growing in economic and cultural importance," Minister Dhaliwal stated. "The new Film Services Unit will ensure that our tax administration is responsive to the industry's changing circumstances."

In addition, Revenue Canada will establish the Film Industry Advisory Committee comprised of industry representatives. This committee will provide advice to the Minister and the Department on industry-related matters on a regular and ongoing basis. The Committee will be patterned along the lines of other sectoral advisory committees which currently serve the Minister.

Finally, the Minister indicated that a special interdepartmental working group will be formed to streamline administration of the Canadian Film or Video Production Tax credit. "This is a relatively new program and we recognize that its administration needs some improvement," said Mr. Dhaliwal.

Today's announcements result from consultations that began in January when Mr. Dhaliwal invited more than 40 representatives of the film industry, including actors, from Canada and the United States to discuss taxation issues. Consultations have continued with a working group co-chaired by Canadian film producers Fitch Cady of Vancouver and Patrick Whitley of Toronto. Industry stakeholders that helped in developing the Revenue Canada initiatives include the Canadian Film and Television Production Association, the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association, the Motion Picture Association of America, and major U.S. film companies such as Walt Disney Studios, Warner's, Universal and Paramount.

Industry representatives have indicated support for the new initiatives.

Mr. Whitley said, "We found Mr. Dhaliwal and his department very responsive to some important industry concerns. Film is a major growth industry in Canada and its significance was taken seriously by Revenue Canada. The changes made are the result of many hours of hard work by Revenue Canada and the film industry working group."

Mr. Cady added, "It was a pleasure to work closely with the Minister and the Department on these issues. I am confident that the changes that have been put in place will serve the industry well now and in the future.

Elizabeth McDonald, president and chief executive officer of the Canadian Film and Television Production Association (CFTPA), said the CFTPA had been actively involved in the process of consultation with Revenue Canada. "Several of our members attended the meeting with the Minister in January. They and our staff continued to work toward this practical and equitable solution," said Ms. McDonald.

"The film industry representatives have all contributed immensely to today's announcements by their good will and persistence," Mr. Dhaliwal said. "I want to personally thank everyone involved for working together to resolve these important matters."

Film or Video Production Services Tax Credit

125.5 (1) Definitions — The definitions in this subsection apply in this section.

"accredited film or video production certificate", in respect of a film or video production, means a certificate issued by the Minister of Canadian Heritage certifying that the production is an accredited production.

Related Provisions: 125.5(3) — Tax credit where certificate issued; 125.5(6) — Revocation of certificate.

"accredited production" has the meaning assigned by regulation.

Regulations: 9300 (meaning of accredited production).

"assistance" means an amount, other than an amount deemed under subsection (3) to have been paid, that would be included under paragraph 12(1)(x) in computing the income of a taxpayer for any taxation year if that paragraph were read without reference to subparagraphs (v) to (vii).

"Canadian labour expenditure" of a corporation for a taxation year in respect of an accredited production means, in the case of a corporation that is not an eligible production corporation in respect of the production for the year, nil, and in any other case, subject to subsection (2), the total of the following amounts in respect of the production to the extent that they are reasonable in the circumstances:

(a) the salary or wages directly attributable to the production that are incurred by the corporation after October 1997, and in the year or the preceding taxation year, and that relate to services rendered in Canada for the stages of production of the production, from the final script stage to the end of the post-production stage, and paid by it in the year or within 60 days after the end of the year to employees of the corporation who were resident in Canada at the time the payments were made (other than amounts incurred in that preceding year that were paid within 60 days after the end of that preceding year),

(b) that portion of the remuneration (other than salary or wages and other than remuneration that relates to services rendered in the preceding taxation year and that was paid within 60 days after the end of that preceding year) that is directly attributable to the production, that relates to services rendered in Canada after October 1997 and in the year, or that preceding year, to the corporation for the stages of production of the production, from the final script stage to the end of the post-production stage, and that is paid by it in the year or within 60 days after the end of the year to a person or a partnership, that carries on a business in Canada through a permanent establishment (as defined by regulation), and that is

(i) an individual resident in Canada at the time the amount is paid and who is not an employee of the corporation, to the extent that the amount paid

(A) is attributable to services personally rendered by the individual in Canada in respect of the accredited production, or

(B) is attributable to and does not exceed the salary or wages paid by the individual to the individual's employees at a time when they were resident in Canada for personally rendering services in Canada in respect of the accredited production,

(iii) another corporation that is a taxable Canadian corporation, all the issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of which (except directors' qualifying shares) belong to an individual who was resident in Canada and the activities of which consist principally of the provision of the individual's services, to the extent that the amount paid is attributable to services rendered personally in Canada by the individual in respect of the accredited production, or

(iv) a partnership, to the extent that the amount paid

(A) is attributable to services personally rendered in respect of the accredited production by an individual who is resident in Canada and who is a member of the partnership, or

(B) is attributable to and does not exceed the salary or wages paid by the partnership to its employees at a time when they were resident in Canada for personally rendering services in Canada in respect of the accredited production, and

(c) where

(i) the corporation is a subsidiary wholly-owned corporation of another corporation that is a taxable Canadian corporation (in this section referred to as the "parent"), and

(ii) the corporation and the parent have filed with the Minister an agreement that this paragraph apply in respect of the production, the reimbursement made by the corporation in the year, or within 60 days after the end of the year, of an expenditure that was incurred by the parent in a particular taxation year of the parent in respect of the production and that would be included in the Canadian labour expenditure of the corporation in respect of the production for the particular taxation year because of paragraph (a) or (b) if

(iii) the corporation had had such a particular taxation year, and

(iv) the expenditure were incurred by the corporation for the same purpose as it was incurred by the parent and were paid at the same time and to the same person or partnership as it was paid by the parent.

Proposed Amendment — 125.5(1)"eligible production corporation"

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 73, will amend the portion of the definition "eligible production corporation" in subsec. 125.5(1) after para. (b) and before para. (c) to read as above, applicable after November 1999.

An eligible production corporation does not include a corporation which is a tax-exempt entity, a corporation controlled by one or more tax-exempt entities or a prescribed labour-sponsored venture capital corporation.

(a) the total of all amounts each of which is the corporation's Canadian labour expenditure for the year or a preceding taxation year exceeds the aggregate of

(b) the total of all amounts, each of which is an amount of assistance that can reasonably be considered to be in respect of amounts included in the total determined under paragraph (a) in respect of the corporation for the year that, at the time of filing its return of income for the year, the corporation or any other person or partnership has received, is entitled to receive or can reasonably be expected to receive, that has not been repaid before that time pursuant to a legal obligation to do so (and that does not otherwise reduce that expenditure),

(c) the total of all amounts, each of which is the qualified Canadian labour expenditure of the corporation in respect of the accredited production for a preceding taxation year before the end of which the principal filming or taping of the production began, and

(d) where the corporation is a parent, the total of all amounts each of which is included in the total determined under paragraph (a) in respect of the corporation for the year and is the subject of an agreement in respect of the accredited production referred to in paragraph (c) of the definition "Canadian labour expenditure" between the corporation and its subsidiary wholly-owned corporation.

(c) that definition does not apply to an amount to which section 37 applies; and

(d) for greater certainty, that definition does not apply to an amount that is not a production cost including an amount in respect of advertising, marketing, promotion, market research or an amount related in any way to another film or video production.

History: Subsec. 125.5(2) added by 1998, c. 19, s. 145.1, applicable to taxation years that end after October 1997.

126. (1) Foreign tax deduction [foreign tax credit] — A taxpayer who was resident in Canada at any time in a taxation year may deduct from the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer an amount equal to

(a) such part of any non-business-income tax paid by the taxpayer for the year to the government of a country other than Canada (except, where the taxpayer is a corporation, any such tax or part thereof that may reasonably be regarded as having been paid by the taxpayer in respect of income from a share of the capital stock of a foreign affiliate of the taxpayer) as the taxpayer may claim, not exceeding, however,

(b) that proportion of the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer that

(i) the amount, if any, by which the total of the taxpayer's qualifying incomes exceeds the total of the taxpayer's qualifying losses

(A) for the year, if the taxpayer is resident in Canada throughout the year, and

(B) for the part of the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada, if the taxpayer is non-resident at any time in the year, from sources in that country, on the assumption that

(C) no businesses were carried on by the taxpayer in that country,

(D) where the taxpayer is a corporation, it had no income from shares of the capital stock of a foreign affiliate of the taxpayer, and

(E) where the taxpayer is an individual,

(I) no amount was deducted under subsection 91(5) in computing the taxpayer's income for the year, and

(II) if the taxpayer deducted an amount under subsection 122.3(1) from the taxpayer's tax otherwise payable under this Part for the year, the taxpayer's income from employment in that country was not from a source in that country to the extent of the lesser of the amounts determined in respect thereof under paragraphs 122.3(1)(c) and (d) for the year,

(ii) the total of

(A) the amount, if any, by which,

(I) where section 114 does not apply to the taxpayer in respect of the year, the taxpayer's income for the year computed without reference to paragraph 20(1)(ww), and

(II) where section 114 applies to the taxpayer in respect of the year, the total of the taxpayer's income for the period or periods in the year referred to in paragraph 114(a) and the amount that would be determined under paragraph 114(b) in respect of the taxpayer for the year if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f)

exceeds

(III) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount deducted by the taxpayer under section 110.6 or paragraph 111(1)(b), or deductible by the taxpayer under paragraph 110(1)(d), (d.1), (d.2), (d.3), (f) or (j) or section 112 or 113, for the year or in respect of the period or periods referred to in subclause (II), as the case may be, and

Proposed Amendment — 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)

(A) the amount, if any, by which,

(I) if the taxpayer was resident in Canada throughout the year, the taxpayer's income for the year computed without reference to paragraph 20(1)(ww), and

(II) if the taxpayer was non-resident at any time in the year, the amount determined under paragraph 114(a) in respect of the taxpayer for the year

exceeds

(III) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount deducted under section 110.6 or paragraph 111(1)(b), or deductible under paragraph 110(1)(d), (d.1), (d.2), (d.3), (f) or (j) or section 112 or 113, in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the year, and

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 74(1), will amend cl. 126(1)(b)(ii)(A) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq. except that, in its application to the 1998 and 1999 taxation years, subcl. (A)(I) shall be read without reference to the expression "computed without reference to paragraph 20(1)(ww)".

Technical Notes: Section 126 of the Act provides rules under which taxpayers may deduct, from tax otherwise payable, amounts they have paid in respect of foreign taxes. The present amendments introduce three sorts of changes to these "foreign tax credit" rules. Most importantly, a new foreign tax credit is introduced for non-resident individuals who were formerly resident in Canada. This new credit, along with a comparable credit for non-resident beneficiaries of trusts that are resident in Canada, is found in new subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22).

Second, the existing foreign tax credit for non-residents of Canada, in subsection 126(2.2), is modified to reflect changes to the rules that apply to emigrant taxpayers under subsection 128.1(4) of the Act.

Third, several of the provisions in section 126 are modified to take account of changes to section 114 of the Act.

Subsection 126(1) of the Act provides a tax credit in respect of foreign non-business income tax — that is, foreign taxes levied on investment and other non-business income. The credit is determined by multiplying the taxpayer's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction: the numerator of that fraction, determined under 126(1)(b)(i), consists of the taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) from sources in the particular country calculated on certain assumptions; the denominator of that fraction, determined under paragraph 126(1)(b)(ii), consists generally of the amount by which the taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) exceeds the deductions listed in subclause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)(III).

Clause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment removes a reference in subclause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)(I) to section 114, updates the reference to that section in the following subclause, and simplifies subclause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)(III)'s reference to the taxpayer's taxable income for the year. These changes keep the provision in step with the changes to section 114. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

(B) the amount, if any, added under section 110.5 in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the year.

Proposed Amendment — Authorized foreign bank

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (authorized foreign banks), February 11, 1999: (7) That, subject to the general limits imposed under section 126 of the Act, an authorized foreign bank be entitled to deduct, in computing its tax payable under Part I of the Act for a taxation year, an amount in respect of withholding taxes imposed by the government of a foreign country or of a political subdivision of that country, provided that

(a) the bank was not, at any time in the year, resident in that country, and

(b) the taxes were withheld in respect of income for the year from a business carried on by the bank in Canada, to the extent that the amount does not exceed the tax that would otherwise be payable on that income under Part I of the Act.

Department of Finance news release, February 11, 1999: Foreign Tax Credit

Canadian banks may claim, in computing their Canadian income tax payable, a credit in respect of taxes paid to a foreign government on income subject to tax in Canada. It is not considered appropriate to give identical treatment to foreign banks, because taxes payable to Canada in respect of a business carried on in Canada should have priority over taxes that are paid to a government in a foreign bank's home jurisdiction.

However, a foreign bank may also pay withholding tax to the government of a third country in respect of income that is subject to tax in Canada. In these circumstances, it is appropriate to allow the foreign bank a tax credit in computing its tax payable in Canada on that income.

It is proposed that a new foreign tax credit be added to the Income Tax Act in respect of withholding taxes paid by a foreign bank to governments of countries other than its country of residence on business income subject to tax in Canada.

is of

(ii) the total of

(A) the amount, if any, by which

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec 74(2), will amend cl. 126(2.1)(a)(ii)(A) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq. except that, in its application to the 1998 and 1999 taxation years, subcl. (A)(I) shall be read without reference to the expression "computed without reference to paragraph 20(1)(ww)".

Technical Notes: Subsection 126(2.1) of the Act sets out a limit for the amount of a taxpayer's deduction under subsection 126(2) in respect of businesses carried on by the taxpayer in a country other than Canada.

The limit is the total of amounts computed under paragraphs 126(2.1)(a) and (b). The paragraph (a) amount is computed by multiplying the taxpayer's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction. The numerator of that fraction, determined under subparagraph 126(2.1)(a)(i), generally consists of a taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) from businesses carried on by the taxpayer in the particular country. The denominator of this fraction, determined under subparagraph 126(2.1)(a)(ii), consists generally of the amount by which the taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) exceeds the deductions listed in subclause 126(2.1)(a)(i)(A)(III).

Clause 126(2.1)(a)(ii)(A) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114. The changes update the references in the clause to section 114. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

(B) the amount, if any, added under section 110.5 in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the year, and

(b) that proportion of the amount, if any, added under subsection 120(1) to the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer that

(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (a)(i) in respect of the country

is of

(ii) the amount, if any, by which,

(A) where section 114 does not apply to the taxpayer in respect of the year, the taxpayer's income for the year, and

(B) where section 114 applies to the taxpayer in respect of the year, the total of the taxpayer's income for the period or periods referred to in paragraph 114(a) and the amount that would be determined under paragraph 114(b) in respect of the taxpayer for the year if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f)

exceeds

(C) the taxpayer's income earned in the year in a province (within the meaning assigned by subsection 120(4)).

(2.2) Non-resident's foreign tax deduction — If at any time in a taxation year a taxpayer who is not at that time resident in Canada disposes of a property that was deemed by subsection 48(2), as it read in its application before 1993, or by paragraph 128.1(4)(e), as it read in its application before October 2, 1996, to be taxable Canadian property of the taxpayer, the taxpayer may deduct from the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer an amount equal to the lesser of

(a) the amount of any non-business-income tax paid by the taxpayer for the year to the government of a country other than Canada that can reasonably be regarded as having been paid by the taxpayer in respect of any gain or profit from the disposition of the property, and

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 74(3), will amend the portion of subsec. 126(2.2) before para. (b) to read as above, applicable to 1996 et seq.

Technical Notes: Canada generally makes foreign tax credits available only to persons who are resident in Canada. The only current exception to this principle is subsection 126(2.2), which provides a foreign tax credit to a non-resident individual who, as an emigrant from Canada, made the election provided under existing subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iv) of the Act in respect of one or more properties that were not taxable Canadian property.

With this election and the provision of security, the individual emigrant could choose to treat the properties as taxable Canadian property. That meant, on the one hand, that the individual was not treated as having disposed of those properties on emigration; but on the other hand, that any post-departure gain on the properties remained subject to Canadian tax (assuming no tax treaty applied). On the ultimate disposition of the deemed taxable Canadian property, subsection 126(2.2) allowed the former Canadian resident a credit for foreign tax on the gain.

Under the new rules for emigrants from Canada, the election in subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iv) is no longer available. Subsection 126(2.2) is therefore amended to apply only to properties that were deemed to be taxable Canadian properties under the election as it read before October 2, 1996. This amendment applies to the 1996 and subsequent taxation years.

Subsection 126(2.2) is also amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, to reflect the changes to section 114 of the Act. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

(b) that proportion of the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer that

(i) the taxable capital gain from the disposition of that property

is of

(ii) the amount that would be the taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada

(A) for the year, if section 114 is not applicable, or

(B) if section 114 is applicable, for the portion of the year referred to in paragraph 114(b)

if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to that portion thereof following paragraph 115(1)(c).

Proposed Amendment — 126(2.2)(b)(ii), (iii)

(ii) if the taxpayer is non-resident throughout the year, the taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada for the year determined without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f), and

(iii) if the taxpayer is resident in Canada at any time in the year, the amount that would have been the taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada for the year if the part of the year throughout which the taxpayer was non-resident were the whole taxation year.

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 74(4), will amend subpara. 126(2.2)(b)(ii) to read as above, and add subpara. (iii), applicable to 1998 et seq.

(2.22) Former resident — trust beneficiary — If at any particular time in a particular taxation year a non-resident individual disposes of a property that the individual last acquired at any time (in this subsection referred to as the "acquisition time") on a distribution after October 1, 1996 to which paragraphs 107(2)(a) to (c) do not apply only because of subsection 107(5), the trust may deduct from its tax otherwise payable under this Part for the year (in this subsection referred to as the "distribution year") that includes the acquisition time an amount not exceeding the lesser of

(a) the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of any business-income tax or non-business-income tax paid by the individual for the particular year

that can reasonably be regarded as having been paid in respect of that portion of any gain or profit from the disposition of the property that accrued before the distribution and after the latest of the times, before the distribution, at which

(iii) the trust became resident in Canada,

(iv) the individual became a beneficiary under the trust, or

(v) the trust acquired the property, and

(b) the amount, if any, by which

(2.23) Where foreign credit available — For the purposes of subsections (2.21) and (2.22), in computing, in respect of the disposition of a property by an individual in a taxation year, the total amount of taxes paid by the individual for the year to one or more governments of countries other than Canada, there shall be deducted any tax credit (or other reduction in the amount of a tax) to which the individual was entitled for the year, under the law of any of those countries or under a tax treaty between Canada and any of those countries, because of taxes paid or payable by the individual under this Act in respect of the disposition or a previous disposition of the property.

Related Provisions: 128.3 — Shares acquired on rollover deemed to be same shares for 126(2.23).

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 74(5), will add subsecs. 126(2.21) to (2.23), applicable to 1996 et seq.

Technical Notes: In some circumstances, an individual who is a former resident of Canada may be subject to tax in another country on a gain that accrued while the individual was resident in Canada, and that has already been subject to Canadian tax on emigration. Similarly, the non-resident beneficiary of a Canadian trust who receives trust property on a distribution may be taxed abroad on a gain that accrued while the property was held by the trust, and that has been taxed in Canada on the distribution.

EXAMPLE — double taxation of pre-departure gain

Lee emigrates from Canada to Treatyland at a time when he owns a house in Treatyland. Lee bought the house while resident in Canada; at the time of emigration, the house has an adjusted cost base of $60,000 and a fair market value of $100,000. The resulting $40,000 latent capital gain will produce a taxable capital gain of $30,000 immediately before departure, and that taxable capital gain will be subject to Canadian tax.

Assume that the house increases in value to $120,000 after Lee leaves Canada, and that Lee sells the property in 2005 for that amount.

In principle, the gain that has been subject to Canadian tax ought not to be taxed a second time. However, Treatyland may not yet recognize the tax effect of changes in residence and may simply tax Lee, when the property is disposed of, on the full amount of the his gain since first acquiring the property. In that case, Treatyland will tax not only the $20,000 gain realized since Lee left Canada, but also the $40,000 gain that accrued while Lee was resident in Canada. In the end, Lee is taxed twice on the same gain.

The best way to alleviate such results is to modify Canada's tax treaties to ensure appropriate recognition for the Canadian tax that arises on departure. However, treaty changes can take considerable time. As an interim measure, new subsection 126(2.21) provides limited credits against an individual's Canadian tax that arises in the year of the individual's departure from Canada, for post-departure foreign taxes. These foreign taxes can comprise both business-income and non-business-income taxes (defined in subsection 126(7)). New subsection 126(2.22) provides similar limited credits against a trust's Canadian tax that arose in the year of a distribution by the trust to a non-resident beneficiary, for the beneficiary's subsequent foreign taxes. It is intended that these interim foreign tax credits will be reviewed by the Government of Canada as appropriate treaty changes are put in place.

Subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22) will apply, in most cases, only for taxes paid to countries with which Canada has a tax treaty. Exceptions are provided for taxes imposed by a foreign country on gains on real property situated in that country. In keeping with the general international principle that the country in which real property is located has the first right to tax gains on that real property, Canada will always provide credit for such taxes. Similarly, credit for those taxes will be available regardless whether Canada has a tax treaty with the particular country.

More specifically, subject to the conditions described above, the credit provided to an individual under new subsection 126(2.21) is computed on a property-by-property basis, as the lesser of two amounts.

The first amount, described in paragraph 126(2.21)(a), is the total of those portions of the foreign taxes paid in respect of the disposition of the property that can reasonably be considered to relate to the portion of the gain or profit in question that arose before the individual's emigration from Canada. Where the property in question is real property situated outside Canada, the creditable taxes are those paid to the government of the country where the property is located or, to the government of another country in which the individual is resident and with which Canada has a tax treaty. [Note that a tax paid to the government of a political subdivision of a country is included for this purpose in the taxes paid to the government of the country. See the definitions "business-income tax" and "non-business-income tax" in subsection 126(7) of the Act.]

The second amount, described in paragraph 126(2.21)(b), is in effect the amount of the individual's tax under Part I of the Act for the year of emigration that is attributable to the deemed disposition of the particular property under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. In determining this amount, previous applications of subsection 126(2.21) are taken into account.

EXAMPLE — operation of new credit

In the example above, Lee will be able to claim a credit for the lesser of 2/3 ($40,000/$60,000) of the Treatyland tax on the total amount of the gain, and the Canadian tax that arose because of the deemed disposition on emigration. The credit will be applied against Lee's Canadian tax for the emigration year, with amended subsection 152(6) allowing any necessary reassessment.

Note that since the property in question (a house) is real property, Lee could also claim a credit for tax paid to another treaty country in respect of his pre-emigration gain, if he lived in that other country. For example, if the house were located not in Treatyland but in Nontreatyland, Lee could — as a resident of Treatyland – claim a credit in respect of both Treatyland tax and Nontreatyland tax .

New subsection 126(2.22) sets out a comparable rule in respect of distributions after October 1, 1996 by Canadian-resident trusts to non-resident individuals. While the general operation of this rule is very similar to that of new subsection 126(2.21), it should be noted that in this case the credit involves two taxpayers: foreign taxes paid by the beneficiary are creditable against Canadian taxes paid by the trust.

A consequential amendment to subsection 152(6) of the Act ensures that any necessary assessments of tax will be made in order to take account of the effect of new subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22).

New subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22) apply to the 1996 and subsequent taxation years.

New subsection 126(2.23) of the Act limits the availability of the new foreign tax credits under subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22). This rule requires that in computing, for the purposes of these new credits, the foreign tax an individual has paid in respect of the disposition of a property, the individual must first take into account any relevant tax credit (or other reduction in tax) that the individual is entitled to in respect of the property under the law of a foreign country or under a tax treaty between Canada and a foreign country. This is intended to ensure that the credits under new subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22) are only available to the extent that another country is not required to give credit for Canadian tax in respect of the disposition or a prior disposition of the property.

Subsection 126(2.23) applies to the 1996 and subsequent taxation years.

Department of Finance news release, June 5, 2000: Detailed Notice of Ways and Means Motion Tabled

Secretary of State (International Financial Institutions) Jim Peterson, on behalf of Finance Minister Paul Martin, today tabled a detailed Notice of Ways and Means Motion in the House of Commons to provide for the implementation of previously announced amendments to the Income Tax Act.

These amendments include the following:

- amendments relating to taxpayer migration, which were released in draft form on December 17, 1999. The main purpose of these proposals is to enhance Canada's ability to tax capital gains accrued by emigrants while resident in Canada. Under the Motion tabled today, the seven-year expiry date for the provision of relief against double taxation is proposed to be deferred pending the renegotiation of tax treaties with Canada's treaty partners. The Government will monitor the need for a definitive expiry date as additional countries implement protection against double taxation in respect of capital gains in renegotiated treaties;

Proposed Amendment — Alternatives to Former Resident's Credit

Department of Finance news release, September 10, 1999: Taxpayer Migration and Trusts: Technical Backgrounder

Comments received on the December 1998 detailed proposals regarding taxpayer migration and trusts identified two major concerns: the need for flexibility in accepting security for the later payment of any tax arising from the deemed disposition on departure; and possible overlap between Canadian and foreign taxes. This backgrounder describes the government's proposed response to each of these two concerns. These changes, together with modifications to address more technical issues raised in connection with the December 1998 proposals, will be included in the proposals when they are put into bill form with the 1999 budget legislation.

2. Interaction of Canadian and foreign taxes

The second major concern raised by submissions is the possibility of overlap between Canada's taxation of an emigrating individual's pre-departure capital gains and the later taxation of the same economic value — whether as a capital gain or in another form — by the individual's new country of residence. It was observed that this overlap, if it is not relieved by one country or the other, may result in a total effective tax rate that is well above the prevailing Canadian rate.

In many cases, changes to Canada's tax treaties will resolve issues of overlapping Canadian and foreign tax. To allow an opportunity for treaties to be revised, the December proposals included a time-limited credit for certain foreign taxes paid on predeparture gains on property other than foreign real estate. A credit would also be available, with no time limit, for certain taxes paid on gains on foreign real estate.

It is reasonable to expect, however, that other situations will arise where Canada's rules and the rules of another country conflict, and where resolution through a tax treaty is not possible in the short term. Provided that Canadian and/or foreign tax is paid at full Canadian rates (in other words, that there is no net avoidance of tax), it may be appropriate in certain of these cases for Canada to recognize and accommodate the foreign tax. Therefore, while the government will continue its efforts to find treaty solutions, it will also consider other options where the scale and the frequency of a problem make that appropriate.

(2.3) Rules relating to unused foreign tax credit — For the purposes of this section,

(a) the amount claimed under paragraph (2)(a) by a taxpayer for a taxation year in respect of a country shall be deemed to be in respect of the business-income tax paid by the taxpayer for the year in respect of businesses carried on by the taxpayer in that country to the extent of the amount of that tax, and the remainder, if any, of the amount so claimed shall be deemed to be in respect of the taxpayer's unused foreign tax credits in respect of that country that may be claimed for the taxation year;

(b) no amount may be claimed under paragraph (2)(a) in computing a taxpayer's tax payable under this Part or Part I.1 for a particular taxation year in respect of the taxpayer's unused foreign tax credit in respect of a country for a taxation year until the taxpayer's unused foreign tax credits in respect of that country for taxation years preceding the taxation year that may be claimed for the particular taxation year have been claimed; and

(c) an amount in respect of a taxpayer's unused foreign tax credit in respect of a country for a taxation year may be claimed under paragraph (2)(a) in computing the taxpayer's tax payable under this Part or Part I.1 for a particular taxation year only to the extent that it exceeds the total of all amounts each of which is the amount that may reasonably be considered to have been claimed in respect of that unused foreign tax credit in computing the taxpayer's tax payable under this Part or Part I.1 for a taxation year preceding the particular taxation year.

Related Provisions: 87(2)(z) — Amalgamations; 88(1)(e.7) — Winding-up.

Pre-RSC History: Para. 126(2.3)(b) amended to substitute "tax payable under this Part or Part I.1" for "tax payable under this Part" and para. 126(2.3)(c) substituted by 1986, c. 55, subsec. 47(2), applicable to 1986 et seq. Para. 126(2.3)(c) formerly read:

(c) an amount in respect of a taxpayer's unused foreign tax credit in respect of a country for a taxation year may be claimed under paragraph (2)(a) in computing his tax payable under this Part for a particular taxation year only to the extent that it exceeds the aggregate of amounts claimed in respect of that unused foreign tax credit in computing his tax payable under this Part for taxation years preceding the particular taxation year.

Subsec. 126(2.3) added by 1984, c. 45, subsec. 42(4), applicable to 1984 et seq.

(3) Employees of international organizations — Where an individual is resident in Canada at any time in a taxation year, there may be deducted from the individual's tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part an amount equal to that proportion of the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the individual that

(a) the individual's income

(i) for the year, where section 114 is not applicable to the individual in respect of the year, and

(ii) for the period or periods in the year referred to in paragraph 114(a), where section 114 is applicable to the individual in respect of the year,

Proposed Amendment — 126(3)(a)(i), (ii)

(i) for the year, if the individual is resident in Canada throughout the year, and

(ii) for the part of the year throughout which the individual was resident in Canada, if the individual is non-resident at any time in the year,

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, subsec. 74(6), will amend subparas. 126(3)(a)(i) and (ii) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 126(3) of the Act provides a tax credit to Canadian-resident employees of international governmental organizations other than prescribed international governmental organizations. The amount of the credit is limited to the amount of any levy in lieu of taxes charged to the employee by the organization on the employee's remuneration.

The credit that may be claimed under subsection 126(3) is determined by multiplying the employee's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction. The numerator of that fraction, determined under paragraph 126(3)(a), consists of the employee's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the employee is resident in Canada) from employment with the organization; the denominator of the fraction, determined under paragraph 126(3)(b), consists generally of the amount by which the employee's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the employee is resident in Canada) exceeds the deductions listed in subparagraph 126(3)(b)(iii).

Subsection 126(3) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, to revise its references to section 114 of the Act to reflect changes to that section. For additional information, see the commentary on section 114.

(4) Portion of foreign tax not included — For the purposes of this Act, an income or profits tax paid by a person resident in Canada to the government of a country other than Canada or to the government of a state, province or other political subdivision of such a country does not include a tax, or that portion of a tax, imposed by that country or by that state, province or other political subdivision, as the case may be, that would not be imposed if the person were not entitled under this section or under section 113 to a deduction in respect thereof.

(4.1) No economic profit — If a taxpayer acquires a property, other than a capital property, at any time after February 23, 1998 and it is reasonable to expect at that time that the taxpayer will not realize an economic profit in respect of the property for the period that begins at that time and ends when the taxpayer next disposes of the property, the total amount of all income or profits taxes (referred to as the "foreign tax" for the purpose of subsection 20(12.1)) in respect of the property for the period, and in respect of related transactions, paid by the taxpayer for any year to the government of any country other than Canada or to the government of a state, province or other political subdivision of such a country, is not included in computing [the] taxpayer's business-income tax or non-business-income tax for any taxation year.

(b) otherwise included in business-income tax or non-business-income tax for any taxation year, and

(c) similar to the tax levied under Part XIII

shall, subject to subsection (4.3), not exceed the amount determined by the formula

A is 40%, if the foreign tax would otherwise be included in business-income tax, and 30%, if the foreign tax would otherwise be included in non-business-income tax,

B is the total of the taxpayer's proceeds from the disposition of the property at the particular time and the amount of all dividends or interest from the property in respect of the period included in computing the taxpayer's income for any taxation year,

C is the total of the cost at which the taxpayer last acquired the property and any outlays or expenses made or incurred by the taxpayer for the purpose of disposing of the property at the particular time,

D is the amount of foreign tax that would otherwise be included in computing the taxpayer's business-income tax or non-business-income tax for the particular year, and

Proposed Amendment — Oil and Gas Production Sharing

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 28, 2000: Foreign Tax Credits — Oil and Gas Production Sharing

(32) That, in applying the foreign tax credit rules in section 126 of the Act in respect of an oil or gas business carried on in a taxation year by a resident of Canada in a country, other than Canada, that imposes an income or profits tax on other business income, there be treated as foreign taxes paid by the taxpayer for the year amounts that

(a) become receivable in the year by a government of that country (or its agent) because of an obligation of the taxpayer in respect of the business,

(b) are computed by reference to the amount or value of oil or gas produced or extracted, net of operating and capital costs,

(c) are not royalties under the foreign country's law, payments made in a purely commercial capacity or otherwise creditable foreign taxes, and

(d) do not exceed, in total, 40 per cent of the taxpayer's income from the business for the year, less amounts otherwise creditable as foreign taxes, and that this provision apply to those taxation years of a taxpayer that begin after the earlier of December 31, 1999 and a date selected by the taxpayer (which date may in no case be earlier than December 31, 1994).

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Foreign Tax Credit and Oil and Gas Production Sharing Agreements

To limit the impact of the application of Canadian and foreign taxes on the same income, Canada provides its residents with "foreign tax credits" for income or profits taxes they have paid to another country. In most cases, it is clear whether a foreign tax is sufficiently similar to Canada's income tax to qualify for these credits. However, the characterization of a levy as an income tax is less clear with respect to certain levies imposed in some oil- and gas-producing countries.

The levies in question are imposed under "production sharing agreements" between the governments of the countries concerned (or their agents) and Canadian-resident companies. Under a typical production sharing agreement, the company undertakes to conduct exploration activities within a defined territory and, where the exploration efforts are successful, to develop the resource property and exploit it commercially. At the commercial exploitation stage, the resource production is divided between the company and the foreign government, often through a state-owned corporation, according to a sharing formula agreed to in the contract. Such formulas, which vary from contract to contract, typically grant the company enough of the resource production to cover its costs and to generate a profit. Production sharing agreements generally set out in detail how costs are to be recovered over time, what proportion of the production must be allocated to the state in any given year, and other key terms.

Most of the countries that enter into such agreements with Canadian companies also impose a corporate income tax. Rather than applying the tax separately, however, these countries integrate their income tax into the production sharing agreements themselves. In effect, part of the foreign government's share of the production under the agreement is characterized as a payment in satisfaction of the Canadian company's income tax liability to that government.

Because a production sharing agreement both allocates oil and gas production and incorporates the foreign country's income tax, it can be difficult to determine which portion of the foreign government's share is on account of an income tax. Indeed, the Income Tax Act's current foreign tax credit rules may deny credit for any and all payments made pursuant to such agreements. The uncertainty Canadian companies face as a result can put them at a disadvantage relative to those foreign competitors whose domestic taxation rules [most notably the United States and the United Kingdom — ed.] provide foreign tax credits in similar circumstances.

The budget proposes to introduce amendments to the Income Tax Act that will clarify the eligibility for a business foreign tax credit of certain payments made by Canadian resident taxpayers to foreign governments on account of levies imposed in connection with production sharing agreements. The proposed amendments will set out those circumstances in which a levy will be considered to be, in substance, an income tax paid by a taxpayer.

More specifically, the proposed amendments will require that, for a foreign levy to qualify, it must be computed by reference to net income, after recognition of relevant expenses, and must not be, under the agreement, either a royalty or any other consideration paid for the exploitation of the resource. Because the amendments are intended to accommodate situations where the foreign income tax is calculated pursuant to a production sharing agreement, as opposed to being assessed separately, the proposed rules will apply only where the foreign country otherwise imposes what can be regarded as an income tax.

The amount eligible for a foreign tax credit cannot, under the proposal, exceed 40 per cent of the taxpayer's income from the business for the year and will be subject to the existing rules of the Act governing the claiming of business foreign tax credits and the carry-overs of unused credits. The 40 per cent rate is an approximation of the Canadian corporate rate and is the same proxy rate currently used for other foreign tax credit purposes.

The amendments to the business foreign tax credit provisions of the Act will also include specific rules for the recognition of a taxpayer's foreign exploration and development expenses (FEDE), discussed in the next section. [See Resolution (33) reproduced under 126(7)"qualifying incomes" — ed.] While there already exists a general requirement in the Act for taxpayers to recognize FEDE in computing the amount of foreign tax credit that can be claimed in respect of foreign source income, these rules will specify how FEDE will be allocated to a particular foreign country for purposes of claiming a foreign tax credit.

The new rules will apply for foreign income taxes paid by any given taxpayer, pursuant to production sharing agreements, in taxation years that begin after the earlier of December 31, 1999, and a date chosen by the taxpayer (which date cannot in any case be earlier than December 31, 1994).

Proposed Amendment — 127(9)"investment tax credit"(l)

(l) any of the income is exempt income or is exempt from tax under this Part,

Application: The June 5, 2000 Notice of Ways and Means Motion, s. 75, will amend para. (l) of the definition "investment tax credit" in subsec. 127(9) to read as above, applicable to all taxation years.

Technical Notes: Subsection 127(9) of the Act provides definitions that are used in the provisions relating to the investment tax credit ("ITC").

The definition "investment tax credit" was amended by S.C. 1998, c. 19, ss. 33(1) [formerly Bill C-28] to exclude expenditures in respect of which a taxpayer has not filed a prescribed form with Revenue Canada within one year after the taxpayer's filing-due date for the taxation year in which the expenditure was incurred. That amendment, which applied to all taxation years, incorrectly replaced the reference to "income exempt from tax under this Part" in the former "post-amble" to the definition "investment tax credit" with the concept "exempt income". The phrase "income exempt from tax under this Part" excluded from the definition of "investment tax credit" amounts incurred by a person whose taxable income is exempt from tax, as well as income that is exempt income for the purpose of calculating income under section 3 of the Act. Paragraph (l) of the definition "investment tax credit" is amended to correct this oversight, applicable to all taxation years.

(m) the taxpayer does not file with the Minister a prescribed form containing prescribed information in respect of the amount on or before the day that is one year after the taxpayer's filing-due date for the particular year;

Related Provisions: 37(11) — Filing deadline for R&D claims; 66(10.1)(b) — Joint exploration corporation; 87(2)(qq) — Amalgamations — continuation of corporation; 87(2.11) — Vertical amalgamations; 88(1)(e.3) — Flow-through of ITC to parent on wind-up of corporation; 127(7) — ITC of testamentary trust; 127(8) — ITC of partnership; 127(9.1) — Where control acquired before end of year; 127(9.2) — Where control acquired after beginning of year; 127(10.1) — Addition to ITC for SR&ED done by CCPC; 127(10.8) — Regeneration of ITCs where entitlement to assistance expires; 127(11.1), (11.2) — ITC calculation rules; 127(26) — Expenditure unpaid within 180 days of end of year; 127(27), (29) — Reduction of ITC where property converted to commercial use; 127(28) — Recapture of negative ITC; 127.1(2), (2.01) — Refundable investment tax credit; 139.1(18) — Holding corporation deemed not to acquire control of insurer on demutualization; 149(10)(c) — Where corporation becomes or ceases to be exempt; 248(1)"investment tax credit" — Definition applies to entire Act; 256(6)–(9) — Whether control acquired (for paras. (j), (k)).

(m) before June 1997, and, for this purpose, the definition "filing-due date" in subsec. 248(1) applies to all taxation years. The closing words formerly read:

Proposed Amendment — SR&ED tax credits

Revenue Canada news release, June 17, 1999: Dhaliwal reports progress on research and development tax credit action plan

The Honourable Herb Dhaliwal, Minister of National Revenue and M.P. (Vancouver South-Burnaby), today reported on the progress that Revenue Canada has made in completing the steps called for in his Action Plan to improve the Scientific Research and Experimental Development (SR&ED) program.

Specifically, Mr. Dhaliwal summarized several accomplishments since the last progress report delivered in March 1999:

A consulting firm, Stitt Feld Handy Houston ADR of Ottawa and Toronto, has been selected to develop a dispute resolution system for the SR&ED program.

Through a joint industry/government initiative, Jean Claude Gavrel, a software specialist with extensive industry experience, has been retained for SR&ED's National Technology Sector Specialist (NTSS) program. Mr. Gavrel is an Information Technology executive with more than 20 years of experience in managing and implementing high technology product development and research programs. Other specialists will be identified in the future to supplement the Department's technology experience. The SR&ED program is being reorganized to bring Headquarters and field offices under one program head. Consultations with all regional offices have been completed and a framework has been established to strengthen the focus on the science and incentive aspects of the program.

Mr. Dhaliwal announced his Action Plan in a document entitled Building Partnerships in November 1998. The Action Plan responded to concerns and recommendations received from the industry at a Vancouver conference in June 1998. A key component of the Action Plan has been the establishment of a Steering Committee composed of industry representatives. The Steering Committee meets frequently to monitor progress of the Action Plan and to co-ordinate industry sector-specific working committees.

"With the progress made to date and with continued support from industry, Revenue Canada is on track to have a totally revitalized SR&ED program by the end of this year," Mr. Dhaliwal said.

The Minister added that the SR&ED program now delivers about $1.4 billion of federal assistance to Canadian business, and the number of participants nationwide has been growing at about 13% each year. The Minister also reiterated the commitment made in the last federal budget to invest more than $1.8 billion by 2003 to build on the knowledge and innovation initiatives introduced in previous budgets.

Proposed Amendment — Administration of R&D credits

Revenue Canada news release, March 10, 1999: Federal plan moving ahead to improve incentives for SR&ED

Revenue Canada's action plan to improve its Scientific Research and Experimental Development (SR&ED) program is moving to full implementation, the Honourable Herb Dhaliwal, Minister of National Revenue and MP (Vancouver South-Burnaby) reported today.

"Our progress to date shows the strong commitment of my department and the Government of Canada to making the federal incentive program for industrial research and development fair, friendly, and client-centred," Mr. Dhaliwal said. "One of my key objectives as Minister of National Revenue is to make sure that this action plan for research and development becomes a reality."

Mr. Dhaliwal outlined a number of developments which illustrate the progress made since the action plan was announced in November, 1998.

In less than one year, the backlog of SR&ED claims has been reduced by two-thirds. As part of the plan's objective to make the SR&ED program more client centred, Revenue Canada has named account executives to work with research-intensive companies in Vancouver and Ottawa. Also, the Department has made a preclaim review of research projects available in six Canadian cities. These reviews will be extended to all parts of Canada within the next year. Eleven representatives from technology-based industries have been named to a national steering committee that meets regularly to oversee the implementation of the action plan. Joint training has started in the aerospace industry and is planned for other industries. Revenue Canada has released a publication called A Guide to Conducting a Technical Review. This publication has been released to the field and is being circulated for consultation. Sector committees have been formed in 11 industries, including automotive, pharmaceuticals, software, oil and gas, communications, and chemicals. These committees will clarify eligibility issues and develop interpretation guidelines for the federal SR&ED tax incentives. In April, Revenue Canada expects to process almost all SR&ED claims within 120 days.

In addition, Mr. Dhaliwal confirmed that the Department will have an independent SR&ED directorate separate from other tax audit activities. The directorate will manage a program that channels about $1.3 billion into industrial research and development in Canada every year.

The Director General of this new SR&ED program directorate is Norine Heselton, Vice-President, Policy, Information Technology Association of Canada, who joined Revenue Canada on an executive interchange in January. Ms. Heselton is a former telecommunications executive and a past chair of the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 28, 2000: Scientific Research and Experimental Development

Canada provides one of the most generous tax incentive regimes among industrialized countries for scientific research and experimental development (SR&ED). It is important that this support only benefits those activities to which the program was intended to apply.

In claiming credits for SR&ED (including information technology), three basic criteria must be met:

- scientific or technological uncertainty,
- scientific or technological advancement, and
- scientific or technological content.

Technological advancement is a key element of the program. Technological advancement does not include the application of technology that is merely new to a particular taxpayer or industry. In particular, development work that is routine in nature does not qualify as SR&ED. While the definition of SR&ED was amended in 1985 to include experimental development, consistent with international usage, experimental development does not include projects involving only routine engineering or routine development.

This is reflected in the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency's administrative guidelines for software development, which were developed in consultation with industry.

Nevertheless, the administration of the SR&ED program has come under increasing pressure, particularly in regard to its application to information technology. A disproportionate number of disputes between taxpayers and the Government continue to be in the area of information technology. The Canada Customs and Revenue Agency has been faced with a number of very large and complex claims, many of which are not consistent with its administrative guidelines. These claims are in respect of internal use software, such as management information systems and automated services.

Many of the large claims have been made by corporations whose core business is not software development. CCRA has determined that substantially all of these claims reflect the application of available technology, which result in business improvements but do not embody technological advancement that the SR&ED program is intended to benefit. The Government is committed to rigorously applying the existing well established three basic criteria to address the backlog of SR&ED claims related to information technology.

In addition, the Government will consult with industry representatives to ensure that the guidelines on software development, in particular internal use software, both reflect government policy and provide clarity and certainty of application for compliance purposes as well as administration. Once consultations are completed, the Government will determine whether amendments to the Income Tax Act are required.
